The Henderson Community Foundation's bank account is now about $1 million with the addition of $100,000 in coal severance tax money Tuesday. State Sen. Dorsey Ridley presented the check to Henderson

Fiscal Court at its regular meeting, and Judge-executive Hugh McCormick, in giving Ridley the credit, noted "money is tight now in coal severance and it's hard to get any projects done." "I believe it's the job of our local leaders to kind of spearhead this effort of the community foundation, to show the rest of the community that it is a viable thing," Ridley said. "It's something that will leave a legacy that will help future generations of Henderson County. It's a great investment. And it's just the right thing to do." Foundation founder Chase Fulcher was there to accept the money, and he thanked both

Seed firm's local plans starting to sprout

An agricultural seed company is proceeding with its plans to make a multi-million-dollar investment in Henderson, developing a research and distribution facility that at times will host events that could draw 1,000 farmers from around the region. "We're here for the long haul," Scott Ebelhar, an agronomist and Kentucky research director for Beck's Superior Hybrids, told the Henderson Lions Club on Tuesday. Beck's, a fast-growing Midwestern seed developer that is based in Atlanta, Ind., last year purchased a 150-acre plot of cropland at the corner of Airline Road and Gardenmile Road, across from the county school bus garage. This spring and summer, it will build a 52,000-square-foot facility facing Airline Road that will include warehouse operations, meeting space and offices for a staff that will total six full-time employees. "We hope, weather permitting, to have the pad built and concrete work (under way) by the middle

The answer is bromine. The question is which of the halogens is a liquid at room temperature? No, it's not a Jeopardy! question. It's one of a series of math and science queries a group of Henderson County High School students have quizzed over weekly since autumn. Sophomores Jack Hardy and Lance Gibson and juniors Jesse Tapp and Avery Hartley are competing in the Western Kentucky Regional Department of Energy Science Bowl Friday at West Kentucky Community and Technical College. The double-elimination tournament begins at 9 a.m. and should conclude by 3 p.m., said Madison Sewell, a HCHS science teacher and the Science Bowl coach. Henderson will be one of 19 teams squaring off in Paducah. At least one of their competitors will be a familiar face. Joseph Crafton of Henderson will be representing the Gatton Academy of Mathematics and Science.

■ Stumbo plan calls for audits

By Roger Alford
Associated Press

FRANKFORT — More than 1,200 local taxing districts that have operated largely without oversight would be watchdogged under a proposal that House Speaker Greg Stumbo intends to personally usher through the legislature. The Prestonsburg Democrat filed a measure setting up the new level of oversight on Tuesday, shortly after lawmakers resumed a legislative session following a three-week break. Stumbo said the legislation sets up a system for auditing the taxing districts, which spend some $2.7 billion a year to operate rural fire departments, airports, sanitation districts, even libraries. It also would create an online database where taxpayers could review financial reports for each taxing districts while also making their leaders subject to ethics rules. More than 30 Democratic and Republican lawmakers have signed on as co-sponsors of Stumbo's bill. And Senate Floor Leader Damon Thayer, R-Georgetown, said the proposal has bipartisan support in his chamber, too. Stumbo, a longtime lawmaker and former state attorney general, said he took up the issue after state Auditor Adam Edelen released a report last year showing the huge amount of money taxing districts collect and spend. A review by Edelen's staff found Kentucky has 1,268 taxing districts that

Zoning recommendations proposed

■ Wathen Lane land considered for annexation

By Frank Boyett

The Henderson City-County Planning Commission on Tuesday recommended what zoning should be applied to nine parcels of land on Wathen Lane that are being considered for annexation, and also began laying the groundwork to piggy-back on work being paid for by the state of Kentucky. County Engineer Bill Hubiak pointed out to the commission that the state has contracted with two firms to do flyovers of this area that will collect data for its geographic information system (GIS). He recommended contacting the firms, which will be gathering data along the Interstate 69 corridor, as well as as LIDAR from all of western Kentucky. LIDAR, otherwise known as Light Detection And Ranging, uses lasers to measure distances, allowing highly accurate topographic maps as well as the features of buildings and other objects. "They're already going to be up in the air," Hubiak said. "This is something we could look at to reduce our costs. It could save a substantial amount of money." The planning commission authorized having its GIS Committee look into

Three charged in Morganfield burglary, assault

Gleaner staff

Three Union County men are in custody after allegedly breaking into the residence of two people and assaulting them.

The Morganfield Police Department charged Joshua Brown, 22, Damian Berkel, 18, and Michael Bright, 19, all of Morganfield, with first-degree assault and first-degree burglary.

The three are accused of committing the crimes Friday night at a residence on North Morgan Street in Morganfield.

Two of the men allegedly forced their way into the home while the third stood outside, police said.

The men inside the dwelling allegedly assaulted a female resident. When a male occupant in the residence tried to assist the woman, one of the suspects stabbed him in the neck, according to authorities.

Police said the male victim ran to a neighbor’s house after being stabbed and called the police.

Brown, Berkel and Bright left the scene. An investigation into the crimes led to the trio’s arrest. They were lodged at the Union County Detention Center.

The victims were treated at Methodist Hospital Union County. Their conditions were unavailable.

Congress doing little to prevent next fiscal crisis

In August 2011, the White House and Congress, faced with blundering into a default on U.S. debt, agreed to a budget deal that was, by design, so bad that the lawmakers believed they would never have to live up to it.

Instead, a bipartisan “supercommittee” would supersede the terms of the Budget Control Act by coming up with a long-term deficit reduction plan that both parties could agree on and the White House live with.

If the supercommittee failed — as it did — the federal budget for this year would be required to take an across-the-board cut of around $85 billion.

The cuts would continue for 10 years, until $1.2 trillion had been gouged from federal spending.

The cuts, known as a sequester, were supposed to take effect Jan. 1, the dread “fiscal cliff” of recent memory, but at the last minute Congress postponed the moment of reckoning until March 1.

Here it is, the first week in February, and Congress seems to be sleepwalking toward that deadline. The time frame is even tighter than it seems because the GOP-run House plans to work only 11 days this month.

Senate Majority Leader Harry Reid, D-Nev., appeared to up the ante over the weekend when he said Democrats would demand additional revenues — either through tax hikes or loophole closings — as the price of averting the mandatory cuts. The Republicans felt they did their share last month by agreeing to let taxes rise on some upper-income earners. Now, they want to see spending cuts in return.

Some House Republicans now favor letting the sequester take place temporarily to shock Congress into taking federal spending seriously.

Economic analysts disagree about the specific effects of a sequester, but they agree the total effect would be bad. The Associated Press summed up the prevailing view the deadlock “has the potential to slam the economy, produce sweeping furloughs and layoffs at federal agencies and threaten hundreds of thousands of private-sector jobs.”

The Pentagon would bear the brunt of the cuts — about $43 billion this year, an amount that senior officers say would hollow out the military. Defense Secretary Leon Panetta said if Congress allowed the cuts to go through, it would be “a shameful, irresponsible act.”

March 1 isn’t that far off and Congress isn’t above giving itself another postponement.

But the weary American public, including people whose jobs are at stake, generally would appreciate it if Congress showed some sense of urgency about the problem.

When on the other side of the world, Americans can be ugly ... or awesome

A mysterious change seems to come over Americans when they go to a foreign land. They isolate themselves socially. They live pretentiously. They're loud and ostentatious. Perhaps they're frightened and defensive; or maybe they're not properly trained and make mistakes out of ignorance.

— from the 1958 novel “The Ugly American”

Having just returned from our first trip abroad in a couple of years — way, way abroad, a story that will be told in greater detail at another time — I have fresh tips for how to aspire to be the American tourist that so many foreign hosts expect.

Here are some do’s and don’ts:

Expect everything overseas to be just like it is at home. Now is not the time for new culinary or cultural experiences. If you wanted that, you would have tuned your TV to “The Food Network” or “National Geographic Channel.”

Never hesitate to gripe when you learn that an upcoming meal will feature falafel (again?) or fish.

Sigh longingly when you pass a McDonald’s. Sigh even louder if you stop at a kosher McDonald’s and learn that it doesn’t serve cheese on its burgers.

When you meet a fellow American tourist, be sure to express your hometown gripes when asked where you are from, such as the lady tourist from New England who retired to southwest Florida and declared: “We don’t need anyone else to move to Punta Gorda, and we don’t need any more tourists!”

Don’t hold back. Voice every petty grievance about temporary inconveniences. Gripe when it takes a country’s small border checkpoint a half-hour to process the passports of 45 foreign visitors. Complain about the lack of wifi service. And don’t just whisper it; let everyone within earshot know how you are suffering.

CHUCK STINETT

If you’re on a guided bus trip and don’t hear well, always sit in the back so you can cry: “CAN YOU REPEAT THAT?”

It’s a big world, so don’t try to soak up everything. While visiting a site of geologic splendor or extraordinary human significance, continue your extended conversation regarding your favorite stores at the mall back home.

You might be visiting an ancient city, one occupied for many centuries or even millennia. It might have played an extraordinary role in art, culture, faith or philosophy. So be sure to ask relevant questions of your veteran guides:

“How much money do workers make here?”

“What’s the price of gasoline?”

“What would an apartment rent for here?”

Fret unceasingly regarding whether you will arrive someplace at the projected time.

And when in a crowded place, abandon any concern regarding how much space you are taking up or what corridor you might be blocking. You’re on vacation!

I dislike feeling at home when I am abroad.

— George Bernard Shaw

OK, so our trip wasn’t as bad as all of that.

Sure, pretty much everything mentioned above was observed or overheard on our trip. But poor behavior was exhibited by only a small fraction of the group of 45 we traveled with or, among the remainder, on only occasional moments.

That group included seven of us from Henderson, and it was a delight to see what hardy travelers our friends were.

Some were veteran overseas visitors. Another was a novice. But we meshed well, and it was a delight to have friends with which to share the adventures and misadventures of the trip.

One couple was making a return trip, and they opened doors to experiences we could have only imagined, including leading us past tourist traps to a couple of family-owned shops where the proprietors shared both tea and treasures with us.

We became our own little family.

Most of the other travelers were good companions as well. There was Wes, an enthusiastic 28-year-old who once spent nine months in Kenya, and his roommate, a quiet but kind Taiwanese-born doctor whose first name was, coincidentally, Wesley.

There was Sarah, a sweet college freshman who became a sort of adopted daughter and granddaughter in our traveling family.

“The only thing I don’t know,” our friend Joyce — a grandmother — said sadly, “is how I can take Sarah home with us.”

But in time, we had to say goodbye to Sarah, who hugged each of us.

Later, we had to bid farewell to Wes as well.

I saw him at breakfast on his last day in the country and I extended a hand to shake. “Naw, bring it in,” he said, and we hugged instead.

We enjoyed sparkling days that tanned our faces. We endured hours outside in ceaseless cold rain.

We survived a 12-hour plane ride. We had our bus stopped — and boarded — twice in a single evening by policemen armed with M-16s.

We ate bread hot out of the oven. We had smoked fish and marinated cucumbers at breakfast, and chocolate-stuffed pastries, too.

We conjured private jokes that we cracked ourselves up with.

We saw sights that left us with no need to speak.

We stood on ground that has had significance to three world religions for 15 centuries.

We walked past pilgrims and tourists from Brazil and Italy, from Japan and Spain.

We posed for pictures with a little plastic duck who represented a friend back at home.

We formed friendships with people from other lands.

We ourselves became better friends than before, bound by shared memories and good will.

To coin a phrase: It was a trip. A trip that even a couple of ugly Americans couldn’t spoil.

Perhaps travel cannot prevent bigotry, but by demonstrating that all peoples cry, laugh, eat, worry and die, it can introduce the idea that if we try and understand each other, we may even become friends.

Lawmakers need to focus on the real issues

From the Owensboro Messenger-Inquirer:

The public often wonders what lawmakers do with their time when they’re in Frankfort.

Political differences bog down the process, but so do frivolous bills. Barely into the new session, there were already 195 bills filed — one included to make the Kentucky long rifle the official state gun and another to allow hunters to kill an unlimited number of coyotes ...

The large number of bills creates a legislative logjam that has little to do with addressing the needs of the commonwealth.

In last year’s 60-day session, a combined 766 bills were filed in the House and Senate. Only 155 of them became law.

Some have argued in the past to limit the number of bills that can be submitted. Another solution is possibly moving up the deadlines to file a bill. In reality, neither is necessary.

What’s required is responsible lawmakers prepared to do what it takes to fix the state’s more critical problems instead of wasting time on trivial matters that do little to move Kentucky forward.

Otherwise, we’ll have a financially unsound state while we have hunters who can kill all of the coyotes they can with their official Kentucky long rifles.

Horror, healing for boy in kidnap

By Jay Reeves and Kate Brumback
Associated Press

MIDLAND CITY, Ala. — By all accounts, a 5-year-old in Alabama endured an unforgettable horror: Held for a week in a closet-size bunker underground, a captive of a volatile killer, his only comforts a Hot Wheels car and other treats passed to him by officers.

Yet after being whisked to safety by federal agents in a raid that left his kidnapper dead, he appeared to be acting like a normal kid: He was running around, playing with a toy dinosaur and other action figures, eating a turkey sandwich and watching “SpongeBob SquarePants,” relatives and Dale County Sheriff Wally Olson said.

“We know he’s OK physically, but we don’t know how he is mentally,” Betty Jean Ransbottom, the boy’s grandmother, said Tuesday. She added that she feared the ordeal would stay with the child, who turns 6 today, the rest of his life.

Meanwhile, agents swept the 100-acre property for explosives for a second day as part of an investigation so painstaking that authorities had not yet removed the body of the abductor, 65-year-old Jimmy Lee Dykes, officials said.

FBI officials have offered few details publicly about the standoff and the raid that ended it. Agents stormed the bunker Monday, whisking the boy to safety and leaving Dykes

Obama urges stopgap deal to avoid automatic slashes

■ Budget office predicts deficit under $1 trillion

By Jim Kuhnhenn and Andrew Taylor
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Eager to buy time and avoid economic pain, President Barack Obama urged Congress on Tuesday to pass targeted short-term spending cuts and higher taxes as a way to put off sweeping, automatic cuts that would slice deeply into military and domestic programs starting March 1.

Obama’s appeal came as Congress’ budget office projected a yearly federal deficit under $1 trillion for the first time in his presidency and as Republicans applied political pressure on the president to submit balanced budgets, pushing fiscal issues back to the forefront in Washington after weeks devoted to immigration and guns.

A short-term deficit-trimming measure would delay once again the broad and onerous spending cuts that are unpopular with both political parties, underscoring the government’s difficulty adopting long-term budget policies. Obama conceded the problem, even though he previously has scoffed at temporary budget reprieves.

“Let’s keep on chipping away at this problem together, as Democrats and Republicans, to give our workers and our businesses the support that they need to thrive in the weeks and months ahead,” Obama said in a short statement in the White House briefing room.

Illustrating the challenge for the government, the Congressional Budget

Office said the government will run a $845 billion deficit this year. That’s down from last year’s $1.1 trillion but still high enough to require the government to borrow 24 cents of every dollar it spends.

However, as more baby boomers retire and claim Medicare and Social Security, deficits would move higher and again reach near $1 trillion in the latter part of the 10-year window.

The slight reduction in the projected deficit for this year is because of an anticipated higher revenue caused by a higher tax rate on top earners negotiated over the New Year’s holiday, the end of a temporary payroll tax cut, a slowly improving economy and a slower rate of growth for health care costs.

The automatic cuts Obama is seeking to avoid are part of a 10-year, $1 trillion deficit reduction plan that was supposed to spur

Budget deficit estimate is $854B

WASHINGTON — The federal budget deficit will drop below $1 trillion for the first time in President Barack Obama’s tenure in office, a report said Tuesday.

The Congressional Budget Office analysis said the government will run an $845 billion deficit this year, a modest improvement compared with last year’s $1.1 trillion shortfall but still enough red ink to require the government to borrow 24 cents of every dollar it spends.

The agency projected that the economy will grow just 1.4 percent this year if $85 billion in across-the-board spending cuts take effect as scheduled March 1. Unemployment would average 8 percent.

The report predicted the deficit would dip to $430 billion by 2015, the lowest since the government posted a $459 billion deficit in former President George W. Bush’s last year in office.

U.S., China diplomats discuss North Korea

WASHINGTON — The Obama administration talked to China on Tuesday about North Korea facing “further consequences” under a recent U.N. Security Council resolution if it conducts a nuclear test, the State Department said.

New Secretary of State John Kerry discussed North Korea’s “continued provocative rhetoric” in a phone call with China’s Foreign Minister Yang Jiechi. It follows Kerry’s conversations this week with his counterparts from Japan and South Korea, key U.S. allies in the region.

State Department spokeswoman Victoria

Nuland said that the three conversations “were remarkably similar” on the importance of implementing the commitments of the January resolution if the North takes further action that violates its international obligations.

Nuland said all the countries are concerned that despite the strong measures in the resolution, “the provocative rhetoric continues, which means that we’ve all got to stay unified in watching this and making absolutely clear to (Kim) Jong-un that if it takes further action, so will we.”

Number of Hispanics in House in question

WASHINGTON — How many Hispanic members are there in Congress? Turns out narrowing it down to one number is not easy.

There is no dispute about the Senate, which has three Hispanic senators. The House, however, is another matter.

The House Press Gallery counts 33 Hispanic representatives in the 113th Congress, not including delegates. The Congressional Hispanic Caucus Institute, a nonprofit affiliated with the caucus, puts the number at 31. The National Association of Latino Elected and Appointed Officials tallies 28.

NALEO defines Hispanic or Latino as someone who can trace their ancestry to a Spanish-speaking country and identifies with that culture.

The Congressional Hispanic Caucus Institute has no formal guidelines; it counts members who self-identify as Hispanic.

The House Press Gallery identifies as Hispanic anyone whose linguistic origins come from Spain or Portugal.

France may start Mali pullout soon

TIMBUKTU — France’s foreign minister said in a newspaper interview that his country’s troops may start pulling out of a military intervention in the African country of Mali in March.

Laurent Fabius was quoted in France’s Metro newspaper as saying, “I think that starting in March, if everything goes as planned, the number of our troops should diminish.”

The Metro report, published online Tuesday and tweeted by Fabius’ office, gave no firm figures or dates for an eventual withdrawal.

France has some 4,000 troops in Mali in an intervention that started last month against Islamist extremists who had seized the north of the country last year and had started pushing toward the capital.

Netanyahu hits snag in building coalition

JERUSALEM — As Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu prepares to take office for a third time, his attempts to form a new coalition government have gotten off to a rocky start.

Netanyahu vows to form a broad-based government to tackle the country’s challenges in the coming years. Given the dizzying array of potential coalition partners and their deep differences on key issues, Netanyahu will be hard pressed to build a stable government, much less make significant progress on such divisive matters as drafting ultraorthodox Jewish seminary students into the military and pursuing peace with the Palestinians.

Netanyahu got the nod to form a new government Saturday, following a Jan. 22 election. He has six weeks to put a team together.

Newcomer Yair Lapid, whose party came out of nowhere to become the second largest in the parliament, is thought to be an important partner for Netanyahu.

But Lapid was quoted as saying that he is ready to become the parliamentary opposition leader and could force new elections that would make him the prime minister within 18 months.

Islamic party leader sentenced to life

DHAKA — A Bangladeshi tribunal prosecuting cases stemming from the 1971 independence war sentenced a leader of an Islamic opposition party to life in prison Tuesday, sparking street clashes with police that killed two people and injured dozens more.

Opposition leaders have criticized the war crimes trials, held 40 years after the country won independence from Pakistan, as an effort to weaken challengers to Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina’s government, and human rights groups have raised concerns about their fairness.

In a packed courtroom at the High Court in Dhaka, Judge Obaidul Hasan pronounced Abdul Quader Mollah guilty of killing a student and a family of 11 and of aiding Pakistani troops in killing 369 others.

In anticipation of the verdict, Mollah’s Jamaat-e-Islami party had ordered a nationwide general strike to denounce the trial, shutting down schools and shops and halting most traffic in Dhaka.

Bulgaria links Hezbollah to a July attack on Israel

■ EU is urged to recognize terrorist group

By Veselin Toshkov and Paisley Dodds
Associated Press

SOFIA, Bulgaria — Hezbollah was behind a bus attack that killed five Israeli tourists in Bulgaria last year, investigators said Tuesday, describing a sophisticated bombing carried out by a terrorist cell that included Canadian and Australian citizens.

The announcement brought renewed pressure on the European Union from the U.S., Israel and Canada to designate the group a terrorist organization and to crack down on its fundraising operations across Europe. The EU, which regards Hezbollah as a legitimate political organization, has resisted such a move.

Interior Minister Tsvetan Tsvetanov said two of the suspects in the July 2012 attack had been living in Lebanon for years — one with a Canadian passport and the other with an Australian one. He said investigators had traced their activities back to their home countries.

“We have well-grounded reasons to suggest that the two were members of the militant wing of Hezbollah,” Tsvetanov said.

A third suspect entered Bulgaria with them on June 28, he said, without giving details.

Lebanese Prime Minister Najib Mikati condemned the attack and said his country would cooperate fully.

Hezbollah, a Shiite militant group and political party in Lebanon that emerged in response to Israel’s 1982 invasion, has been linked to attacks and kidnappings on Israeli and Jewish interests around the world.

The group has denied involvement in the Bulgaria bombing, and Hezbollah officials in Beirut declined to comment Tuesday.

The bomb exploded as the Israeli tourists were on their way from the airport to their hotel in the Black Sea resort of Burgas. The blast also killed a Bulgarian bus driver and the suspected bomber, a tall and lanky pale-skinned man wearing a baseball cap and dressed like a tourist.

Although it was initially believed to be a suicide bombing, Europol Director Rob Wainwright said that investigators now believe the bomber never intended to die. He said a Europol expert who analyzed a fragment of a circuit board determined that the bomb was detonated remotely. He said investigators were still looking into who detonated it and how one of the suspected bombers was killed.

Bulgarian investigators found no links to Iran, which Israel had accused of playing a role in the attack.

The findings increased pressure on Europe to declare Hezbollah a terrorist organization.

Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu called the investigation “further corroboration of what we have already known, that Hezbollah and its Iranian patrons are orchestrating a worldwide campaign of terror that is spanning countries and continents.”

The Obama administration called on Europe to take “proactive action” to disrupt Hezbollah.

President of Iran visits Egypt

By Maggie Michael
Associated Press

CAIRO — Iranian President Mahmoud Ahmadinejad discussed the crisis in Syria with his Egyptian counterpart Tuesday in the first visit by an Iranian leader to Cairo in more than three decades, marking a historic departure from years of frigid ties between the regional heavyweights.

Ahmadinejad’s three-day visit, which is centered around an Islamic summit, is the latest sign of efforts by Egypt’s Islamist President Mohammed Morsi to improve relations, which have been cut since Iran’s 1979 revolution.

Morsi’s flirtation with Iran is seen as aiming to strike an independent foreign policy and broaden Egypt’s connections after the ouster two years ago of longtime leader Hosni Mubarak, who kept close to the line of the United States. Such a visit by an Iranian leader would have been unthinkable under Mubarak, who was a close ally of the U.S. and shared Washington’s deep suspicions of Tehran.

But the limits to how far Morsi can go were on display during Tuesday’s visit. There are deep suspicions in overwhelmingly Sunni Muslim Egypt toward Iran and its Shiite clergy leadership. Also, Morsi’s government was quick to reassure Arab Gulf nations, which are bitter rivals of Tehran and are concerned over the spread of its influence, that Egypt is intent on their security.

Holograms may help keep Holocaust memories alive

DAMIAN DOVARGANES / ASSOCIATED PRESS

University of Southern California computer scientist David Traum, left, interacts with Holocaust survivor Pinchas Gutter. A collaboration with the Shoah Foundation is digitizing Holocaust survivors.

By John Rogers
Associated Press

LOS ANGELES — For years, Holocaust survivor Pinchas Gutter has told the tragic story of watching his parents and 10-year-old twin sister herded into a Nazi death camp’s gas chambers so quickly that he had no time to even say goodbye.

He was left instead with an enduring image he has carried with him through 70 years: that of his sister vanishing into a sea of people doomed to die.

Only this time the elderly, balding man wasn’t really there as he recounted the horror of the Holocaust to an audience gathered in an auditorium at the University of Southern California’s School of Cinematic Arts.

It was the 80-year-old survivor’s digital doppelganger, dressed in a white shirt, dark pants and matching vest, that was doing the talking as it gazed intently at its audience, sometimes tapping its feet as it paused to consider a question.

Over the years, elderly Holocaust survivors like Gutter have been leaving behind manuscripts and oral histories of their lives, fearful that once they are gone there will be no one to explain the horror they lived through or to challenge the accounts of Holocaust deniers like Iranian President Mahmoud Ahmadinejad.

For the past 18 months, a group led by USC’s Shoah Foundation has been trying to change that by creating three-dimensional holograms of almost a dozen people who survived Nazi Germany’s systematic extermination of 6 million Jews during World War II.

The plan is for Gutter and the others to live on in perpetuity, telling generations not born yet the horror they witnessed and offering their thoughts on how to avoid having one of history’s darkest moments repeated.

Although people at this week’s event saw Gutter as only a two-dimensional figure, he has been painstakingly filmed for hours in 3-D and, perhaps as early as next year according to those involved in the project, his hologram could be talking face-to-face with visitors at the U.S. Holocaust Memorial Museum in Washington, D.C.

Certainly it will be within five years, said Stephen Smith, the Shoah Foundation’s executive director, and Paul Debevec, associate director of the university’s Institute for Creative Technologies, which is creating the hologram project’s infrastructure.

“Having actually put it together, it’s clear this will happen,” said Debevec.

It comes just in time, said Rabbi Marvin Hier, director of the Simon Wiesenthal Center, which is dedicated to keeping alive the history of the Holocaust.

“This generation is coming to an end, unfortunately,” Hier said of Holocaust survivors, whose average age is estimated at 79. “Within the next decade or so there won’t be many survivors alive anywhere in the world.”

“... The Holocaust is well documented, and we have confessions of the major war criminals,” he said. “But there’s nothing like the human witness who can look you in the eye and say, ‘Look, this is what happened to my husband. This is what happened to my children. This is what happened to my grandparents.’”

Perhaps Gutter’s digital presence summed up the reason for that best when it was asked the other day why he chose to take part.

It replied: “I tell my story for the purpose of improving humanity.”

‘Little House’s’ Mary gets 2nd opinion

■ Scarlet fever likely didn’t cause blindness

By Lindsey Tanner
Associated Press

CHICAGO — Any fan of Laura Ingalls Wilder’s beloved “Little House” books knows how the author’s sister Mary went blind: scarlet fever. But turns out that probably wasn’t the cause, medical experts say, upending one of the more dramatic elements in the classic stories.

An analysis of historical documents, biographical records and other material suggests another disease that causes swelling in the brain and upper spinal cord was the most likely culprit. It was known as “brain fever” in the late 1800s, the setting for the mostly true stories about Wilder’s pioneer family.

Scarlet fever was rampant and feared at the time, and it was likely often misdiagnosed for other illnesses that cause fever, the researchers said.

Wilder’s letters and unpublished memoir, on which the books are based, suggest she was uncertain about her sister’s illness, referring to it as “some sort of spinal sickness.” And a registry at an Iowa college for blind students that Mary attended says “brain fever” caused her to lose her eyesight, the researchers said.

They found no mention that Mary Ingalls had a red rash that is a hallmark sign of scarlet fever. It is easily treated with antibiotics that didn’t exist in the 1800s and is no longer considered a serious illness.

Doctors used to think blindness was among the complications, but that’s probably because they misdiagnosed scarlet fever in children who had other diseases, said study author Dr. Beth Tarini, a pediatrician and researcher at the University of Michigan.

It’s the latest study offering a modern diagnosis for a historical figure. Others subjected to revisionists’ microscope include Soviet leader Vladimir Lenin, composer Wolfgang Mozart and Abraham Lincoln.

Tarini said as a girl she was a fan of the “Little House” books and wanted to research Mary Ingalls’ blindness ever since scarlet fever came up during a medical school discussion.

“I raised my hand and said, ‘Scarlet fever can make you go blind, right?’” The instructor responded, “I don’t think so.”

The disease that Mary Ingalls probably had is called meningoencephalitis. Tarini said it’s likely she had the viral kind, which can be spread by mosquitoes and ticks.

My mother fell and broke her hip

Her tragedy may help save you or a loved one....

By Charles Price
ORTHOPEDIC SURGEON

Sometimes tragedy does lead to triumph. My name is Dr. Charles Price. I’m a Board Certified Orthopedic Surgeon and Professor of Orthopedic Surgery.

And here’s my story of how love and science helped save my wife... and how it can improve the quality of life for millions of Americans.

Four years ago, my mother fell and broke her hip. As an orthopedic surgeon, I knew she was in desperate trouble. That’s because 25% of patients die within a year of a hip fracture. And that statistic hasn’t changed in over 40 years.

A few months later, I got more bad news: My wife of 40 years was suffering from alarmingly low bone density. It’s a common, but very dangerous condition for millions of women over the age of 50.

Sadly, my mom passed away just ten months later from complications of her broken hip. While I was devastated, I was determined not to let my wife become a statistic too. I had to find the key to real bone health quickly.

As an experienced academic orthopedic surgeon with 70 peer-related papers to my credit, my job had always been to heal damaged bone. Now I had to find something besides the standard treatments to support bone health and give my wife a better quality of life. I spent the next two years buried in research papers.

What I found was another wake-up call!

“According to the U.S. Surgeon General’s office, it is estimated that half of all Americans over age 50 are at risk for fractures caused by low bone mass.”

There are drugs available, but drugs can have some bad side effects. There had to be something besides calcium and vitamin D to help support her bone health.

Then, my research uncovered some amazing information! I read a thirty year old document that showed the mineral silicon plays a major role in bone health. Bone can’t form without silicon and that was something new to me.

Could silicon be the ‘hidden key’ to bone formation and bone health?

“China and India, two countries whose diets are rich in silicon, have the lowest frequency of hip fractures. In stark contrast, silicon is largely insufficient in our diet.”

I was sure I’d found part of the answer! I rushed off to the drug store to find a silicon supplement. But what I found were mostly products that may not be easily absorbed in your system.

I was back to square one and racing the clock. That’s when I knew the only solution was to develop a totally new silicon formula. But I couldn’t do it alone.

I contacted several prominent physicians to assist me, each with extensive experience in treating broken bones. When they reviewed my research, they were excited and agreed to help me.

Dr. Charles Price (far right) and a team of orthopedic surgeons, from the Institute for Better Bone Health, have discovered that silicon could be a key to real bone health.

We formulated a ground-breaking supplement that includes silicon and also provides key bone health nutrients that aren’t in many multivitamins or bone health supplements. Silical® is a proprietary formula of nine bone-health ingredients, including silicon, magnesium, calcium, and vitamin D. As many of you already know, adequate calcium and vitamin D throughout life, as part of a well-balanced diet, may reduce the risk of bone fractures. The ingredients in Silical enhance the effects of calcium and vitamin D.

In addition, we’ve added boron to improve retention of magnesium and calcium, vitamin K, which is vital for bone formation, and inositol which studies show can really help improve the effects of calcium and vitamin D.

A fractured hip can be deadly for the elderly.

We combined these nutrients to work together to help inhibit bone removal process, and help you achieve optimal bone health.

What’s more, we have formulated Silical® to be safe and well-tolerated. Combined with a healthy diet and exercise, Silical® has what you need to help your bone health.

Try Silical® Risk-FREE!

It’s easy to take charge of your bone health now. That’s because the manufacturers of Silical® have agreed to send readers of this newspaper one month of Silical® risk FREE!

As a special bonus, find out how you can also get a copy of my new book, “Can You Feel It In Your Bones?” — absolutely FREE!

But hurry! They only have a limited supply to give away. And once they’re gone, they’re gone.

P.S. I’m glad to say my wife is doing great!

Oldest living American not acting her age

By Mike Brassfield
Tampa Bay Times

■ Elsie Thompson, 113, lives independent, happy life in Florida

CLEARWATER, Fla. — The oldest living American isn't in a nursing home or a hospital or an assisted living facility. She lives in her own condominium just off bustling U.S. 19 in Clearwater. Elsie Thompson, 113 years old and counting, became the oldest American when the previous title holder, Mamie Rearden of South Carolina, died in January at the age of 114. Thompson, who has lived in the same Clearwater condo since 1971, is now the fifth-oldest person in the world. Born on April 5, 1899, during the William McKinley administration, she is one of the few human beings left on Earth who drew breath during the 19th century. There are only 14 of those people left — six of which are Americans. The Tampa Bay Times visited with Thompson on her 111th, 112th and 113th birthdays, but the Times wasn't able to interview her on this occasion because her family is concerned about the severe flu season. Last month, the two oldest Americans then living — Besse Cooper, 116, and Dina Manfredini, 115 — both died of infections. As a precaution, Thompson is taking no visitors other than the three caregivers who watch after her around the clock. "We're just being very careful about her coming into contact with anybody," said her son George Thompson, 72, of Thousand Oaks, Calif. The widow of a Pennsylvania lawmaker spends her days putting around her beloved home in the Imperial Cove condominiums. Every morning, one of her caregivers helps her get dressed and makes her breakfast — typically oatmeal, a banana or an egg. "You'll say, 'Elsie, honey, you wanna get up?' And she'll say, 'You betcha.' Sometimes she'll talk and talk," said Susie Harper, her caregiver for more than 13 years. "Sometimes when she's tired, she doesn't want to say anything. But she has a happy and uplifting spirit about her." With a walker, the oldest living American can get around on her own. Although her hearing isn't what it used to be, she listens to music on her stereo. She hums the hymns that she played on the church piano when she was a little girl. Thompson grew up in Pittsburgh and got married in 1921. While her husband,

Ron Thompson, served in the Army Air Corps during World War II, she ran his business, which refined used gold. After he served 22 years in the Pennsylvania House of Representatives, the couple retired to Clearwater. When her husband died in 1986, her son asked her to move to California so they would be closer. But she wanted to stay where her friends and home were. Until age 102, she made an annual trip to the West Coast to spend Christmas with her son, grandchildren and great-grandchildren. Now family visits her instead. "It has continued to work because she's well taken care of," her son said. "It's a different world here, and she's so familiar with everything there. You should see how she gets around her apartment. She knows exactly where everything is." What is Elsie Thompson's secret? Researchers say it's mostly in the genes. "Biology is the most important factor," said Robert Young of the Gerontology Research Group, a global network of experts who track "supercentenarians" — people who are 110 or older. It's a tough group to join. Although almost 7 people per 1,000 live to be 100, only one in 4 million cracks the 110-year barrier. Almost all are women, according to Dr. Stephen Coles, a UCLA gerontologist who co-founded the research group. "It's one thing to be 110. It's another thing to be 113," Young said. "If 110 is like being in the major leagues, 113 is like the all-star team." Only eight people in the world have ever seen their 116th birthdays. Only four have lived to be 117. The oldest human ever, Jeanne Calment of France, made it to 122. The oldest person in the world currently is Jiroemon Kimura, a 115-year-old man.

Global Diabetes Rates Skyrocket: 347 Million Struggle with Blood Sugar and Insulin Woes

Doctor-recommended OPCs won't cure diabetes but may be the next best thing

Are you plagued by food cravings, high and low blood sugar levels, mood swings, low energy and constant fatigue, poor circulation, vision problems, frequent pain or aggravating bouts of brain fog or memory lapses? Doctor recommended OPCs maybe the natural relief you've been seeking. Dr. Fred Vagnini, MD, a cardiovascular surgeon, and Medical Director of the Heart, Diabetes & Weight Loss Centers of New York is one of a growing number of healthcare professionals who recommend the daily use of oligomeric proanthocyanidins, or OPCs. These high-powered, super antioxidants fight dangerous free radicals, the source of oxidative stress and a leading cause of premature aging.

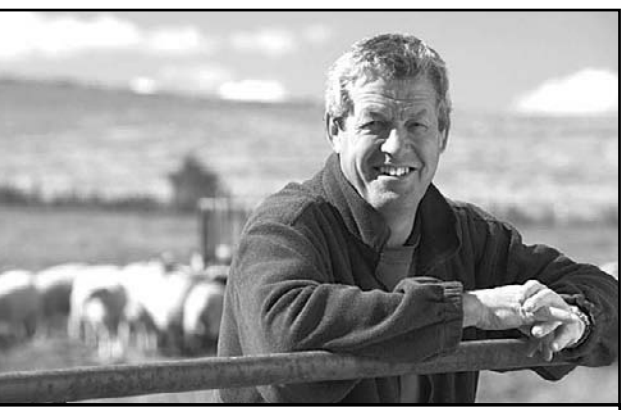

50 Times More Powerful! Doctors are taking a closer look at OPCs because they are an amazing 20 to 50 times more powerful than traditional antioxidants like vitamins A, E, and C. Unlike single antioxidants which are quickly depleted in the body, OPCs have been shown to last as long as 24 hours, fully maximizing their health-boosting powers. With daily use, OPC antioxidants can help support a healthy immune system, strong bones, youthful skin, and healthy blood pressure. Users report increased energy and vitality, fewer aches and pains, healthier blood sugar levels, a sharper mind and memory, and much more. There's one OPC antioxidant based formulation in particular that is fast-gaining the favor of healthcare professionals. Dr. Vagnini calls the health breakthrough named OPC Factor™ — "a miracle." Results That You Can Really Feel - In Minutes! Each great tasting, effervescent serving of OPC Factor provides a potent dose of free radical-crushing powerhouses like grape seed, green tea, pine bark, and red wine extracts, along with lemon bioflavonoids, resveratrol, and 30 naturally occurring vitamins, minerals and enzymes. The effects can be felt almost immediately.

More doctors are recommending concentrated doses of high-powered antioxidants to relieve a host of health issues, including healthy blood sugar levels!

"If your body is functioning properly, it has an amazing ability to heal itself," says Dr. Vagnini. "Powerful OPC antioxidants like those found in OPC Factor can help maintain your body's natural balance - at the cellular level, where it counts." Scientifically Formulated — No More Horse Pills To Swallow! OPC Factor is the first all-natural formula powered by a revolutionary, high-speed Isotonic 'liquid' delivery system. The formula mimics the body's natural pH levels. In fact, when mixed with five ounces of water, OPC Factor has the same pH levels as your own blood and tears. This means that OPC Factor's super-antioxidants and nutrients are quickly and easily absorbed with an amazing bio-availability rate of up to 97 percent. Dr. Vagnini sees this as a key factor in the formula's effectiveness. "Pills and tablets have absorption rates as low as 2 to 20 percent," says Dr. Vagnini. While doctors and consumers are praising the whole-body health benefits of this drug-free compound, it is the surprising results from a National Institutes of Health-funded clinical trial that has everyone talking. Clinical Study Proves It "I can feel it when I drink it. It gives a lot of energy," says Ken Murdock. A landmark, double-blind research study funded by the prestigious National Institutes of Health found that the OPC antioxidant combination in OPC Factor boosts energy levels naturally. Researchers were surprised to discover that OPC

Keith Powell recommends OPC Factor to "...people who have diabetes, or want a little bit more energy or want to improve their blood circulation." "When I started taking OPC Factor," says Keith, "my blood circulation got better. It gives me more energy and in some kind of way, my sugar levels are normal or close to being normal. It's working for me. I'm going to continue to take OPC Factor."

Factor does this — without stimulants! Antioxidants continue to surprise medical researchers. These natural free radical warriors help support a healthy anti-inflammatory response, maintain healthy cholesterol levels, joint flexibility, and cardiovascular health while supporting healthy circulation by strengthening capillaries, arteries and veins. "With OPC Factor, I get this wonderful feeling of well-being. It is the best way to start your day," says Lilian B. of Atlanta. Taking healthy daily doses of antioxidants is recommended by leading physicians like Dr. Vagnini. "OPC antioxidants help to support your natural energy levels and promote a feeling of youthfulness," says Dr. Vagnini. "When you drink these powerful antioxidants first thing in the morning, they rush through the bloodstream in just minutes."

Energize Your Mind A surprising benefit of OPC Factor is the mental clarity and energy many users experience after just a few days. Dr. Vagnini explains, "Our brain is the largest user of energy in our body and it makes sense that we need to nourish it with energizing nutrients to help it stay sharp and focused." OPC Factor's invigorating feeling of wellness lasts throughout the day. No one knows this more than DeAnna C. from Ojai, California, who uses OPC Factor everyday. "My husband, Glenn, started taking OPC Factor in the fall of 2010. After a few weeks, he started telling me how good he felt and wanted me to take it too." "I was skeptical at first," adds DeAnna, "but then I thought, why not? We've been taking vitamins for years so I didn't have anything to lose. I started taking it and... wow! We are true believers!" Daniel B. from Richmond, Virginia had the same experience. "After taking OPC Factor for about two weeks, I began to notice a very distinct increase in my energy level. As the weeks and months progressed, I continued to see the benefits of taking it daily. I have friends and relatives who took my lead and have also experienced similarly remarkable results. Take it from a real skeptic: OPC Factor is good stuff!" Call Now to Receive Your FREE 30-Day Bonus Supply OPC antioxidants like those found in OPC Factor are clinically proven to boost your energy, transform your health and help to restore that youthful feeling of health and wellness, the feeling many of us thought was lost forever! Ridley and McCormick. “Actions speak louder than words,” he said, noting both men have given individually to the foundation. “About $900,000 is already in the account, not counting this,” Fulcher said, and with pledges the foundation has raised nearly $1.7 million. One of the ways the money will be used is provide matching funds so local charities can set up endowments. “We’ve got really big plans for the future with this. This is a really great day for Henderson. We should have had one of these 20 years ago.” Other matters before fiscal court on Tuesday included: ■ Archery range: County Engineer Bill Hubiak notified the court that the county has been approved for $50,000 from the state Department of Fish and Wildlife, which will be used to convert about 40 or 50 acres at the Sandy Watkins Park into an outdoor archery range, with three-dimensional targets representing game animals. Other improvements will include parking, restrooms and possibly a pavilion, all of which would be open to general use at the park. ■ Mine reclamation: Hubiak reported that reclamation of Patriot Coal’s shut-down surface mine is proceeding according to plan, although “I can’t say they’re on schedule” because the weather has been uncooperative. He also noted that Patriot has relinquished all of its land leases, which indicates the mines will not re-open. ■ Patriot bankruptcy: The court passed a resolution in which it expressed support for the United Mine Workers, which asks that Patriot Coal, Peabody Coal and Arch Coal not strip active, retired or laid-off miners of their health care and pension benefits through the Patriot bankruptcy proceedings. ■ Dixon Road: Hubiak reported that the Dixon Road No. 1 bridge is now in place, although wing walls have yet to be installed and the re-alignment of the road must wait for the weather to improve.

■ Rescue squad: The court approved a resolution affiliating itself with the Henderson City-County Rescue Squad, which it does every year. ■ Judge’s scholar: Zackery M. Rickard, a third-grader at East Heights Elementary School, was honored by the court. ■ Business leaders: The court passed a resolution naming Future Business Leaders of America Week, which marks the first time the local chapter has been honored by the court, President Nikoli Williams said. ■ Wood chipper: The court agreed to buy a wood chipper from the Newburgh firm of Vermeer of Indiana for $28,496, which was the only bid submitted.

the possibility. The planning commission also made recommendations on how properties on Wathen Lane should be zoned should annexation be finalized. In this case the proposed changes would not be significant. Most of the land — 23.3 acres — would remain agricultural. The exceptions comprise just over four acres currently zoned for multifamily residential under Henderson County’s zoning ordinance. The recommendation is to zone it high-density residential under the city’s zoning ordinance, which is roughly equivalent. Those high-density properties are 8198, 8206, 8216 and 8222 Wathen Lane, as well as a small strip of property at 8180 Wathen Lane, which are owned by Higginson Family LLP. The agricultural properties are 7996 Wathen Lane owned by Bernard Troy Branson; 8000 Wathen Lane owned by Christopher and Stacey Gager; 8070 Wathen Lane owned by Janet Wallace and 8140 Wathen Lane owned by Marvin and Carilee Hancock. Other items on the planning commission agenda Tuesday included: ■ Legal/audit RFP: The planning commission agreed to seek requests for proposals to provide legal and auditing services to the commission, which it must do every five years or so. ■ Floodplains: GIS analyst Brian Bishop was appointed as the city-county floodplain administrator, which means he will be the go-to man on the community’s new flood insurance maps that go into effect Feb. 20. ■ LDC meetings: The commission’s Land Development Committee has for years met at 3 p.m. the third Tuesday of the month, but decided to change the meeting time to 1:30 p.m. The meeting day will remain the same. ■ Klondike Road: The planning commission approved a request from Perkins & Perkins Farms and Joseph L. Nally to redraw property lines for a new lot about 9,025 feet from the intersection of Klondike Road and Alzey-Uniontown Road and about 12,753 feet from the intersection of Kentucky 1574 and Kentucky 136. The planning commission’s approval is needed because the land is in a flood hazard area; the plat says it will never be built on, that it will remain a wetland area.

The winning team Friday receives an all-expenses paid trip to Washington, D.C., to compete in the U.S. Department of Energy Office of Science’s National Science Bowl, set for late April. The Office of Science created the National Science Bowl 23 years ago to interest young people in pursuing careers in math and science. Hardy describes Henderson’s chances on Friday as decent, though the team is on the young side. While Tapp and Hartley haven’t done quick recall, the two juniors have a year’s more science knowledge than sophomores Hardy and Gibson. “The other teams, I think, are going to have seniors who have been taking AP science classes every year and who do quick recall,” Hardy said. The team began practicing in earnest for the Science Bowl in late November. Since then, they have met weekly on Tuesdays after school. The students on Tuesday worked out their buzzer fingers one last time before regionals, though they were short Hartley and alternate Alec Watson. The present team members still answered dozens of questions posed to them by Berenice Kennedy, a science teacher at the high school, subbing in for an ill Sewell. Each of the students have a specialty field they naturally gravitate toward. Having scored a 5 on the AP chemistry exam as a sophomore, Tapp favors that subject. Hardy enjoys physics the most, while Gibson’s interests lie with computer sciences. All the students are new to the Science Bowl, but veterans of Science Olympiads and academic teams. Placing in the top five would be nice, Hardy said, but they don’t have set goals for the competition. “We all have another year in high school, so this is not going to be the end for us,” Tapp said. “We can always compete again.”

collect $1.5 billion in taxes and fees each year, plus $1 billion in government grants and private donations. Edelen said the districts also hold $1.3 billion in reserves. Edelen said the taxing districts represent a “ghost government.” “It wasn’t too long ago in Kentucky that we had no earthly idea how many special districts there were, where they operated, how they were governed, how much they fee, tax, spend or hold in reserves,” he said. Some lawmakers, including Thayer, had raised concerns about taxing districts in past years and had called for legislative action. Edelen’s findings generated renewed interest in the issue. Edelen’s staff found that about 40 percent of the taxing districts required to submit budgets to elected leaders in fiscal year 2011 did not, and just 55 percent with revenues or expenditures exceeding $750,000 underwent annual audits. Besides improved oversight,

Stumbo’s proposal also would create a centralized registry for taxing districts so that taxpayers and government agencies can determine just how many of them exist in Kentucky. Stumbo and Edelen touted the provision that would require leaders of local taxing districts to undergo ethics training and to answer to a local ethics commission. “It’s a fundamental bit of commonsense that anybody who has the ability to fee and tax and spend in the name of the taxpayer ought to be accountable to an ethics code,”

Edelen said. Lawmakers have a litany of other issues pending, including a proposal to shore up the financially troubled pension system for government retirees. Lawmakers want to pump more money into pensions to eliminate a $33 billion unfunded liability, but they haven’t identified where the cash would come from. Some proponents believe that a separate proposal to reform the state’s tax code could hold the answer. Gov. Steve Beshear, who is to deliver his State of the Commonwealth speech today, has urged lawmakers to deal with the pension issue and pass tax reforms this year. A panel of experts appointed by Beshear to review the state’s tax code proposed a model that would generate about $690 million a year in additional revenue. State Rep. Jim Wayne, a Louisville Democrat who served on the tax panel, said the state’s current tax code is outdated. He filed tax reform legislation Tuesday that would boost state revenues by more than $800 million a year.

Beck’s buried plastic drainage tile on the property last fall that, during dry periods, can be used to study the effectiveness of subterranean irrigation practices by pumping water through the tile. “It’s more efficient than overhead sprinklers” because less water is lost to evaporation, Ebelhar said. The Henderson operation will serve the southern portion of the company’s footprint. In some cases, Beck’s will conduct field tests on customers’ own farms. It will also host educational meetings for farmers, including an annual field show on the first Tuesday of August that could draw 1,000 visitors, Ebelhar said. The company, he said, will work with farmers to help them produce bigger crops using less fertilizer and pesticides. Beck’s also will work to develop new varieties of seeds, from genetically modified seeds that are resistant to insects to conventional hybrids that are more tolerant of drought. Cols take first home loss

■ Henderson falls 67-57 to Dragons

Henderson County received an early education in postseason basketball, one that coach Tyler Smithhart hopes will improve the Colonels' chances once the tournaments begin in two weeks.

Using its depth and up-tempo style, Fourth Region power Warren Central handed Henderson County its first home loss of the season on Tuesday, 67-57.

"This is something we can learn from. I wish we could play this game every night. I wish we could drive to Warren Central on Saturday and play again just because this was so good for our team. Win or lose, you learn a lot from playing that type of team," Henderson County coach Tyler Smithhart said.

"That's the type of team that is going to come out of the Eighth District. That's the type of team you're going to play in the postseason. That's what this is about. This is not about a record. Henderson County teams are going to be 20-win teams no matter who is coaching them or who is playing for them. The difference is that special group that can break the mold and understand that it's about the postseason. We've got to learn our lessons along the way and I think tonight's game was a good one to learn from," he said.

Warren Central (19-6) used its advantage inside with 6-3, 240-pounder Byron Carver and 6-4 Chris Porter-Bunton to take the ball in the paint, especially at the start of the second half. The 3-point shooting of Kaelon Dickerson, who hit four treys, helped open up the inside game.

"(Inside) is where we have our advantage against most teams," Warren Central coach William Unseld said. "I thought we could get it inside especially with the way (Dickerson) was shooting the ball. When they started chasing him, we could get it on his side and get it inside where there wouldn't be any help. We stress the fact that if y'all want to be very good, it has to go in the paint all the time."

Leading 33-29 at the half, the Dragons quickly pushed the lead out to eight.

"They continually threw it up over the top, and we left our man stranded playing one-on-one basketball against guys that were bigger and stronger," Smithhart said.

Henderson County's inside game was missing junior forward Kaleb Duckworth, who was out with the flu. Corey Sanners also missed the game with the flu. But Warren Central was without its leading scorer Nay Walker.

The Colonels got as close as 46-45 near the end of the third quarter, but Dickerson hit consecutive threes. The margin was never closer than five the rest of the way.

"We did a good job in a lot of stretches, but we never could get over the hump," Smithhart said. "We showed a little bit of a lack of discipline. We allowed them to speed us up. We turned the ball over or took a rushed shot about every time we were down three or four points."

Dickerson's 14 points led four Warren Central players in double figures.

David Simmons scored a career high 23 points for Henderson County.

The Colonels won the junior varsity game 57-51. Brady Norman led the 15-0 JV Colonels with 19 points. Andrew Mattingly scored 14 and Bryce Crowley added 10.

Henderson County hosts Webster County Friday night with the top seed in the district and a spot in the Second Region Tournament on the line.

Cats cruise to victory over Gamecocks

■ Mays stars as Kentucky romps 77-55

By Gary Graves
Associated Press

LEXINGTON — Julius Mays' 15 points led five Kentucky players in double figures, and the Wildcats blew out South Carolina 77-55 Tuesday night to move within a game of first-place Florida in the Southeastern Conference.

Kentucky (16-6, 7-2) began the night two games behind Florida before the No. 2 Gators suffered their first conference loss, 80-69 at Arkansas, earlier in the evening.

The Wildcats followed with their fourth straight victory and perhaps most complete in conference play as they shot 27 of 44 from the field and outrebounded the Gamecocks 42-25. Kentucky's 61-percent shooting was its third-highest this season.

Kentucky's Archie Goodwin (10) shoots next to South Carolina's Damien Leonard (32) during the first half of their game at Rupp Arena in Lexington on Tuesday night.

Willie Cauley-Stein and Archie Goodwin each added 13 points, Ryan Harrow had 12 and Nerlens Noel 10 along with 10 rebounds and five blocks.

Freshman forward Michael Carrera scored a game-high 18 points with six rebounds for South Carolina (12-10, 2-7), which lost its third in a row and fifth in the past six games.

The Gamecocks have found the going rough in the first half of their SEC schedule, with their only league victories coming against LSU and Arkansas. They entered Tuesday having lost four of their past five games, including Saturday's defeat to Georgia.

Shooting and rebounding have been the obvious culprits for South Carolina in those recent losses. The Gamecocks haven't shot above 37 percent and have been outrebounded by a 152-127 margin in the four defeats.

Those numbers toughened South Carolina's mission at Rupp Arena, where it hasn't won since 2009. Especially since Kentucky entered the game leading the SEC in defensive rebounds (27.6), second in field goal defense (39 percent) and third in rebounding margin (plus-3.5) in league play.

Noel has been a big part of that, leading the nation in blocks (4.6 per game) and the SEC with 9.8 rebounds in league play.

South Carolina made just 29 percent from the floor (17 of 59).

Wildcats coach John Calipari has wished teammates would be as fierce as Noel. Despite their recent surge, the coach has lamented his team's lack of toughness, especially with the ball after Kentucky committed a season-worst 19 turnovers in an overtime win at Texas A&M.

Razorbacks shock second-ranked Gators 80-69

Wire reports

BJ Young led three players in double figures with 13 points as Arkansas opened quickly and never let up in a shocking 80-69 victory over No. 2 Florida on Tuesday night.

The win improves the Razorbacks (14-8, 5-4 Southeastern Conference) to 14-1 at home this season, and it snaps a 10-game winning streak for the Gators — who had ascended to the No. 2 spot in The AP Top 25 one day earlier.

Arkansas opened the game 15 of 20 from the field.

Mike Rosario led Florida (18-3, 8-1) with 15 points, while Scottie Wilbekin had 14.

■ Bradley 76, Evansville 70: Dyricus Simms-Edwards scored 21 points, Walt Lemon Jr. and Tyshon Pickett added 18 apiece, and Bradley scored the game's final six points Tuesday night to beat Evansville 76-70.

Colt Ryan led Evansville with 27 points, and D.J. Balentine added 13.

■ Michigan 76, Ohio State 74: Tim Hardaway Jr. brought Michigan back with a relentless streak of 3-point shooting, then blocked a shot by Aaron Craft in the final seconds of overtime to give the third-ranked Wolverines a 76-74 victory over No. 10 Ohio State on Tuesday night.

■ Miami 72, Boston College 50: Kenny Kadji scored 10 points during a span of four possessions to start a second-half surge and Miami remained unbeaten in the Atlantic Coast Conference.

■ Kansas State 68, Texas Tech 59: Rodney McGruder had 18 points and nine rebounds to lead No. 13 Kansas State over Texas Tech 68-59 on Tuesday night, extending the Wildcats' winning streak to three games.

■ Purdue 58, Penn State 49: Ronnie Johnson scored 16 points and A.J. Hammons 15 as Purdue downed Penn State 58-49 Tuesday night to even its Big Ten Conference record at 5-5 while keeping

Penn State winless in the conference.

■ Villanova 94, DePaul 71: Ryan Arcidiacono scored 23 points and Villanova put together an impressive shooting display to pull away for a 94-71 victory at DePaul on Tuesday night.

■ Eastern Ky. 97, Crowley's Ridge 31: Robbie Stenzel scored 14 points to lead six Eastern Kentucky players in double figures as the Colonels dominated nonconference-foe Crowley's Ridge 97-31 Tuesday night.

Nadal makes winning return

VINA DEL MAR, Chile — Rafael Nadal wants to stop talking about the aching left knee that kept him away from the ATP Tour for just over seven months until his doubles victory Tuesday with Juan Monaco at a little-known clay court tournament in Chile.

Nadal, whose inflamed knee has lingered despite on-going therapy, had not played since June 28 when he was upset in the second round of Wimbledon by qualifier Lukas Rosol. Nadal and Monaco won easily in just over an hour at the VTR Open, defeating the Czech pair of Frantisek Cermak and Lukas Dlouhy 6-3, 6-2.

Northwestern to play at Wrigley

CHICAGO — Northwestern will play five college football games at Wrigley Field under a partnership with the Chicago Cubs that was announced on Tuesday. The dates of the games are still to be determined due to construction work at the Cubs' storied ballpark. In 2010, Illinois beat Northwestern 48-27 at Wrigley Field in a game that required both teams to run offensive plays only toward the west end zone near the third-base dugout. The east end zone in right field came within a foot or so of a heavily padded brick wall, raising safety concerns.

Coach Taylor fired by ODU

NORFOLK, Va. — Old Dominion University fired men's basketball coach Blaine Taylor on Tuesday with eight games still remaining in the regular season. Taylor has the most wins in school history, compiling a 239 victories over 12 seasons, but his team is 2-20 this year and has lost 10 straight. The move comes in a season when Old Dominion is ineligible to play in the Colonial Athletic Association tournament because it is leaving the league following the season and joining Conference USA.

Vitale to call Final Four games

BRISTOL, Conn. — Dick Vitale will call Final Four games for the first time this year, when a voice synonymous with college basketball will be heard only outside the United States. ESPN announced Tuesday that the excitable announcer will work a semifinal and the championship for ESPN International. The telecasts go to 150 countries and territories across 35 broadcast networks in Latin America, Europe, the Middle East, Africa, Australia, New Zealand, Japan and Canada.

World Peace gets 1-game suspension

NEW YORK — Forward Metta World Peace was suspended for one game on Tuesday because he hit Detroit's Brandon Knight in the face. World Peace grabbed Knight, the former Kentucky star, around the neck and struck him in the jaw with the knuckles of his mostly open hand on Sunday with 1:43 left in the first half of the Lakers' 98-97 win over the Pistons.

NEW YORK — Few would think about swimming in Antarctica, but Sports Illustrated took its models there for its annual swimsuit issue — shooting on all seven continents for the first time. Carpenter likely out for '13

■ Cards ace may have thrown his final pitch

By Jim Salter
Associated Press

ST. LOUIS — Chris Carpenter, one of the best clutch pitchers in the storied history of the St. Louis Cardinals, may have thrown his final pitch. General manager John Mozeliak and manager Mike Matheny announced Tuesday that Carpenter almost certainly won't pitch in 2013 and that his star-crossed career is probably over after a recurrence of a nerve injury that cost him most of last season. Carpenter did not attend, and Mozeliak said the emotions for the 37-year-old still too raw.

Retirement isn't official yet. Carpenter plans to seek further medical evaluation. But Mozeliak seemed resigned to losing him. "He's leaving the door slightly open, but it's unlikely," Mozeliak said of Carpenter's return.

Carpenter's career numbers don't reflect his value to the team. He is 144-94 with a 3.76 ERA in a career that began in Toronto in 1997. He spent six seasons with the Blue Jays and nine in St. Louis. He won the 2005 NL Cy Young Award, going 21-5 with a 2.83 ERA, and was second in 2009 after going 17-4 with a 2.24 ERA.

More telling are his postseason results, including a 10-4 record and 3.00 ERA in 18 starts. There were the eight innings of three-hit shutout baseball in a Game 3 World Series win over Detroit in 2006, a series the Cardinals won in five games; a 1-0 shutout to beat Roy Halladay in Philadelphia in the deciding game of the 2011 NL division series; and the gutty Game 7 World Series-clinching win over Texas on three days' rest in 2011.

In this Oct. 21, 2012, file photo, St. Louis Cardinals pitcher Chris Carpenter wipes his face with a towel in the dugout during the fourth inning of Game 6 of the National League championship series against the San Francisco Giants in San Francisco. Carpenter is unlikely to pitch for the Cardinals this season and his career may be over because of a nerve injury that kept him out most of last year, general manager John Mozeliak said Tuesday.

His career is all the more remarkable considering the amount of time he spent on the disabled list due to various shoulder, elbow and nerve injuries. He missed most of 2002, all of 2003, most of 2007 and 2008, and then last year's season that was limited to three regular-season starts. Carpenter phoned Mozeliak on Friday and told him that after trying to throw off a mound, the nerve injury was back, this time including numbness in his right arm, even bruising on his shoulder and hand. "After speaking with him on the phone you certainly get a sense that he's more concerned about life after baseball," Mozeliak said.

The stunning news spread quickly. Third baseman David Freese tweeted: "Carp. 1 of the best teammates around. Heck of a competitor, impeccable leader. Passion for the game & to win, cant top. (hash)ace." Carpenter was a clubhouse force, a no-nonsense presence who set an example of grit and toughness. Consider 2012: He was written off as lost for the season after the nerve injury first emerged during spring training. But in July, Carpenter had radical surgery that included removal of a rib, and it worked — he pitched three games down the stretch to help St. Louis earn the final NL wild card spot. He beat Washington in the division series but was 0-2 in the NL championship series against even-tinged World Series winner San Francisco, the velocity and command not up to his normal standard. "I don't know if I've ever witnessed a better competitor than Chris, and also leader," said Matheny, a former catcher and teammate of Carpenter's before his current role as manager. Mozeliak agreed. "When he was healthy he was one of the best," Mozeliak said. "He was blessed with talent but he also worked extremely hard. When I think back over the last 10 to 15 years here in St. Louis he was one of those guys who just helped create the model of success. He left nothing to chance." Carpenter's contract calls for a $12.5 million salary this year, of which $2 million is deferred without interest and is to be paid in $200,000 installments each July 1 from 2017-26. As recently as the Cardinals' annual fan gathering in mid-January, Carpenter was saying he was healthy and eager to pitch in 2013. Mozeliak said Carpenter tried throwing from a mound perhaps three times before calling him, emotionally saying he didn't think he could pitch. "He felt to some degree he was letting us down," Mozeliak said. "I assured him nothing was further from the truth." Still, Matheny called the news "a kick in the gut" and the Cardinals have been through this before, too. Adam Wainwright had Tommy John surgery after hurting his elbow in 2011 and missed the entire season.

Vonn hurt in crash, is out for season

By Andrew Dampf
Associated Press

SCHLADMING, Austria — All it took was a moment. Lindsey Vonn landed hard and tumbled face first with a piercing shriek. Just like that, her season was done. The star American skier was on the ground with two ligaments in her right knee torn, a bone in her lower leg broken. The cascading fall down the slope during the super-G at the world championships Tuesday knocked out the four-time World Cup champion for the rest of the season, the latest and most serious in a string of injuries for Vonn at skiing's biggest events. The U.S. team said in a statement it expects her back for the next World Cup season and the 2014 Sochi Olympics, which start a year from this week. The harrowing accident came after Vonn was lifted into the air off a jump in the opening race at the championships. As she hit the ground, her right leg gave way and she spun down face first, throwing an arm out to protect herself. She ended up on her back as she smashed through a gate. On the television feed, Vonn was clearly heard screaming an expletive as she landed, then a despairing "Yes, yes," when someone asked, "Are you hurt?" Race leader and eventual champion Tina Maze watched with her mouth agape. The concern also was obvious on the face of Vonn's sister, Laura Kildow, who has been traveling with her full time this season. For 12 minutes, Vonn lay on the snow getting medical treatment before being airlifted by helicopter to a hospital in Schladming. Vonn tore her anterior cruciate ligament and medial collateral ligament in her right knee, U.S. ski team medical director Kyle Wilkens said in a statement. The broken bone was described as a "lateral tibial plateau fracture." Christian Kaulfersch, the assistant medical director at the worlds, said Vonn left the Schladming hospital on Tuesday afternoon and will have surgery in another hospital. "She first wanted to go back to the team hotel to mentally deal with all what has happened," Kaulfersch said.

Speeds up for drivers at tire test

By Pete Iacobelli
Associated Press

DARLINGTON, S.C. — Carl Edwards and several other Sprint Cup stars gave the new, faster Gen-6 race car a thumbs-up after a Good-year tire test Tuesday at Darlington Raceway. Edwards said the digital speedometer on his Ford Fusion hit 193 mph right before entering turn three, a typically unheard-of speed at the ultra-tricky track. "Each time down, you want to watch and see what you're doing," he said. "But the fastest point is the point where the track needs your attention and your eyes are not supposed to be on that monitor. I saw 193 or something, but I can't look at it any longer before I have to look into the corner." Denny Hamlin, Martin Truex Jr., Paul Menard and Juan Pablo Montoya were also at Darlington for the daylong session. NASCAR teams have previously tested the car at Daytona International Speedway and Charlotte Motorspeedway. Edwards found the new machine to be faster and racers should expect better handling and tighter racing when the circuit returns to NASCAR's oldest superspeedway for the Southern 500 on May 11. A few laps around the track "Too Tough To Tame" in the new car and Truex was confident someone would shatter Darlington's record qualifying speed of 181.254 mph set by Kasey Kahne at the 2011 race. "We were faster in race trim than we qualified last year and I think we qualified sixth or something," Truex said. Then again, Darlington may not be the place for higher speeds. The track has a reputation as one of the most fearsome layouts in NASCAR. Its misshapen corners — think of an egg's oval shape — and narrow straightaways make it treacherous with every pass. The past two races here ended in melees with Kevin Harvick and Kyle Busch tangling after the cooldown lap in 2011 and crews for Kurt Busch and Ryan Newman went at it at the end of the 2012 event.

Coaches evaluating character in recruiting

By Rachel Cohen
Associated Press

The high school janitor could be one of the most important people in college football recruiting. Coaches must evaluate more than just 40-yard dash times and tackling technique when they decide whether to offer a scholarship. A player's success often rests as much on whether he works hard in practice and stays out of trouble off the field. "It's a big deal because the character and quality of the person directly correlates to how much better that guy will get in your program," Rutgers coach Kyle Flood said.

And the people who offer the best takes on that guy's character may be the folks he passes in the hallway every day. "We obviously want kids who can play, but we'd much rather have a little less talent and more character," Mississippi coach Hugh Freeze said. On Wednesday, high school stars around the country will sign their letters of intent to play college football, as fans breathlessly await the final decisions and pore over the rankings. Yet look back four or five years, and many of the highly rated recruiting classes will have produced more busts than All-Americans.

Sure, in some cases it will turn out that the player wasn't fast enough or strong enough to thrive in big-time college football. Coaches watch video, attend games and hold summer camps to try to determine that. A hazier task is seeking to predict how a teenager will mature over the next several years. And coaches lament that they don't get to spend much time with recruits to gauge that. "If you have people involved, there are going to be mistakes and errors," Clemson coach Dabo Swinney said recently. "You're projecting young people, and young people change. You take them and put them in a different environment — some of them adjust, some of them don't. Some take the next step, some of them don't. Some of them lose their focus and get distracted. There are girls and there are parties." The NCAA recently loosened its rules to allow coaches to communicate more with prospects through phone calls and text messages, with the changes taking effect Aug. 1. Assistants can also now spend more time visiting high schools. But a proposal was tabled that would have let coaches start contacting recruits beginning July 1 between their sophomore and junior years. The current rules don't permit communication to begin until after 11th grade.

Fans march with Ravens' parade

■ They pack stadium for team's victory celebration

By Jessica Gresko
Associated Press

BALTIMORE — Baltimore celebrated with its Super Bowl champion Ravens on Tuesday, with thousands of fans in purple lining the streets of Charm City and packing the team's stadium for a celebration.

Fans filled the square in front of City Hall and cheered when the team arrived and when players held the silver Lombardi trophy aloft.

Coach John Harbaugh thanked the fans for their support, and safety Ed Reed sang the melody of Eddie Money's "Two Tickets to Paradise." Retiring middle linebacker Ray Lewis, the only current player to have started with the team when it came to the city from Cleveland in 1996, told fans the team had fulfilled a promise to go to New Orleans and win.

"The city of Baltimore — I love you for ever and ever and ever and ever," Lewis told fans in front of City Hall.

The players were about an hour late arriving, but fans waited to see them pile into military vehicles and set off on their drive to the stadium. The city shot off purple and white confetti as the parade started and the Queen song "We Are the Champions" played over a loudspeaker.

Quarterback Joe Flacco and several other players rode in their own camouflaged-colored military vehicles, while others stood on a float decorated like a football field with a yellow goal post.

Lewis had a position of honor in a military vehicle that brought up the end of the procession. He touched his hand to his heart and gave fans a double thumbs-up as he started on the parade route. Fans followed behind, surrounding the back of the vehicle.

Fans wore every article of purple clothing imaginable. In addition to team jerseys, people were dressed in purple hats and scarves, purple Mardi Gras beads, purple wigs. One man wore a Ravens flag as a cape, and many women came wearing purple lipstick and eye shadow.

Lewis Neal, 59, who was born and raised in Baltimore, was decked out in a purple tie and vest to purple pants and shoes. He said he went to the parade after the team won its first Super Bowl championship in 2001. This time was smaller, he said, but still special.

"My heart goes out for them," said Lewis, who said he had tears in his eyes Sunday when the team beat the San Francisco 49ers 34-31.

Baltimore Ravens linebacker Ray Lewis waves to fans celebrating the NFL team's Super Bowl championship during a parade in Baltimore on Tuesday. The Ravens defeated the San Francisco 49ers 34-31 in New Orleans on Sunday to win the title in Lewis' final season.

63, a Baltimore resident for nearly four decades, cheered the team on Pratt Street, where fans lined the sidewalk five or more people deep in some places. Monseaux, who held a sign that said "Doubt the Ravens nevermore," said she wanted to come to show her support for the team.

"These boys earned it," she said of the victory, cheering as members of the team passed.

Some fans along the parade route said they also planned to go to the team's M&T Bank Stadium. But the stadium, which usually seats 71,000, reached capacity around 12:30 p.m., a police spokesman said, and late-arriving fans were turned away.

When the team did arrive, they treated fans to a thank-you celebration that lasted just over a half an hour. Lewis emerged from a tunnel onto the field, handed off the Lombardi trophy and did his signature dance, "The Squirrel." He thanked fans for their love of the team and said he wanted to win the Super Bowl to repay Baltimore for everything it's done for him.

"There is no place on this earth that's better than Baltimore," he told the crowd.

Flacco, the Super Bowl's most valuable player, also addressed fans.

"Baltimore, we did it. Super Bowl champs, baby," he said.

■ President Barack Obama congratulated the Super Bowl champion

Baltimore Ravens.

The White House says Obama telephoned head coach John Harbaugh and general manager Ozzie Newsome on Tuesday afternoon to congratulate them and the team for their 34-31 victory over the San Francisco 49ers on Sunday.

Obama also talked about how moved he and first lady Michelle Obama were by the story of O.J. Brigrance. The former Ravens linebacker was diagnosed in 2007 with Lou Gehrig's disease and now gets around using a wheelchair and communicates by a device that translates his thoughts.

Obama said he looks forward to congratulating the team in person at the White House.

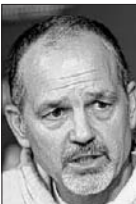

Pagano feels lucky after bout with cancer

By Michael Marot
Associated Press

INDIANAPOLIS — Chuck Pagano walks into the Colts complex now and looks like his old self.

The graying goatee is back. The salt-and-pepper hair on top of his head is slowly returning. The clothes fit, and the 52-year-old coach is eagerly looking toward his second season in the NFL after staring down the biggest opponent of his life — cancer.

Chuck

Y o u Pagano never think anything like this is going to happen to you. We all think we're invincible," Pagano told The Associated Press. "You see it a lot, you read about it a lot, but you never think you're going to fall victim to something like this."

Some people might be tempted to label Pagano the unluckiest man in football in 2012. He barely missed reaching the Super Bowl, lost Peyton Manning before he ever coached a game and was diagnosed with leukemia three weeks into his first season as a head coach.

Pagano, however, considers himself the luckiest guy in football.

He realizes now that if Baltimore had beaten New England last January, he would not have been hired by the Colts. Without being in Indianapolis, he never would have had Dr. Larry Cripe on his medical team or seen his old pal, Bruce Arians, presiding over one of the greatest turnarounds in NFL history while Pagano was fighting for his life. He couldn't have started this rebuilding project with Andrew Luck, either.

He's lucky, too, that his persistent wife, Tina, kept pushing him to see a doctor for the unexplained bruises, lucky he had a city and a state full of people rooting as hard for him as they did for his team and lucky Indy's bye week came so early so he could seek medical care.

"You'd love for it (the bye) to come somewhere in the middle (of the schedule) in case you have injuries and things like that so you can rest up and get ready for the rest of the season," Pagano said. "Thank God it was where it was because I probably never would have taken the time. You know in coaching, it's not like you can just call in sick, and so again, by the grace of God, it was after the third ballgame and I went in and got checked out, and I'm glad I did."

■ Organizers in Indianapolis plan to run a clean, positive campaign to win a bid for the 2018 Super Bowl.

Instead of focusing on the game-day seating problems that plagued Dallas two years ago or the power outage in New Orleans that forced a 34-minute delay during Sunday's game, Indiana Sports Corp. president Allison Melangton wants to tout why Indy would be the ideal choice to host its second Super Bowl this decade.

"That's not been our style," Melangton said Tuesday on the anniversary of the New York Giants' Super Bowl win in Indy. "Typically, when we've been bidding on all our events, we've pointed out why they should come to Indy and not why they should not go somewhere else, and it's worked for us. So why change now?"

Indy has a long and successful track record of hosting some of America's biggest sporting events.

Kaepernick vows to take 49ers back

■ Quarterback still steaming about team's Super Bowl loss

By Antonio Gonzalez
Associated Press

SANTA CLARA, Calif. — Still steaming over the Super Bowl loss, Colin Kaepernick packed up his belongings in the 49ers locker room and made plans with teammates to work out this offseason.

They won't have to wait long.

Kaepernick said Tuesday that he'll be training in the Atlanta area within a week, and the strong-armed and fleet-footed quarterback will bring some of his receivers along with him. All of it is part of Kaepernick's quick evolution from backup to starter that will continue when he enters training camp as the unquestioned franchise star.

After losing 34-31 to the Baltimore Ravens in New Orleans on Sunday, Kaepernick summed up his breakout second season "as not being good enough." He said the Super Bowl loss will stick with him "for the rest of my life."

"It's good to get the experience," Kaepernick said. "We should have won that game regardless, though."

A man of few words and a lot of yards, Kaepernick's potential might give 49ers fans reason to be optimistic more than anything following the first Super Bowl loss in the franchise's storied history.

Kaepernick threw for 1,814 yards and 10 touchdowns with three interceptions in the regular season, starting seven games after taking over for Alex Smith, who will likely be traded or released in the coming months to clear salary-cap space. He also ran for 415 yards and five touchdowns.

Kaepernick really ran away with his new role in the playoffs.

As San Francisco started utilizing more of the Pistol offense he made famous at Nevada, Kaepernick threw for 798 yards and four touchdowns in three postseason games. He also ran for 264 yards and three scores, including a quarterback-playoff record 181 yards rushing in a divisional-round victory over Green Bay.

"He was fantastic the entire season," 49ers coach Jim Harbaugh said. "The stage was not too big for him. He competed at the highest level and played extremely well. He showed a lot of poise, a lot of leadership the entire game. I can't say enough, really. With Colin, it's always just appropriate."

"He's got the appropriate amount of competitive fire when you need competitive fire. He's got the appropriate amount of happy and joy when it's the right time to have that. He plays the game. You just really feel him playing the game, upset when it's the right time to be upset. And he does that with his own personality. I really believe that's the way people should play."

Coming up 5 yards short in the Super Bowl will still haunt Kaepernick forever.

He added only a few more new details on the final, fourth-down play. He said he audibled to the corner fade to Michael Crabtree once Baltimore showed blitz.

Crabtree got tangled up with cornerback Jimmy Smith, and Harbaugh begged and pleaded with officials from the sideline for a flag that never came. Kaepernick remained testy and defiant when questioned about his decision.

"I'll take Crab one-on-one with anybody," he said, tersely.

■ San Francisco 49ers coach Jim Harbaugh will make it a priority to re-sign franchise safety Dashon Goldson to a long-term contract this offseason — something the defender believes he has more than earned after helping his team reach the Super Bowl.

"He's somebody that I think you reward," Harbaugh said Tuesday following his final team meeting of the season before players parted ways.

The 28-year-old Goldson has played on one-year contracts the past two seasons, including the 2012 franchise tag of $6.2 million, and made it clear he's "not for that" again. He had 69 tackles, three interceptions and a forced fumble this season.

Goldson was among the players scheduled to meet with general manager Trent Baalke on Tuesday as they packed up their lockers and headed out for the offseason following Sunday's 34-31 loss to Baltimore in New Orleans.

Superdome power an issue before big game

By Kevin McGill
and Michael Kunzelman
Associated Press

NEW ORLEANS — Concerned the Superdome might not be able to handle the energy needed for its first Super Bowl since Hurricane Katrina, officials spent hundreds of thousands of dollars on upgrades to decayed utility lines, according to documents obtained by The Associated Press.

The improvements apparently weren't enough, however, to prevent an embarrassing and puzzling 34-minute power outage during the third quarter of the game between the Baltimore Ravens and San Francisco 49ers on Sunday.

Two days later, officials still had not pinpointed the cause of the outage.

The Superdome's management company, SMG, and the utility that supplies the stadium, Entergy New Orleans, announced Tuesday that they would hire outside experts to investigate.

"We wanted to leave no stone unturned," Entergy spokesman Chanel Lagarde told the AP. He said the two companies had not been able to reach a conclusion on the cause and wanted a third-party analysis.

"We thought it was important to get another party looking at this to make sure we were looking at everything that we need to examine," Lagarde said.

SMG Vice President Doug Thornton told a news conference at City Hall later Tuesday that the hiring of a third party does not signify a disagreement between SMG and Entergy.

"It's important for us to have total transparency and we have agreed among ourselves that we will exchange records," Thornton said. "We were metering the power. They were doing the same on their side. We need to figure out what the root cause of this is and fix it."

Documents obtained Monday through a records request by The Associated Press show that Superdome officials worried months ago about losing power during the NFL championship.

Tests on the electrical feeders that connect incoming power from utility lines to the stadium showed decay and "a chance of failure," state officials warned in a memo dated Oct. 15. The documents, obtained by the AP through a records request, also show that Entergy expressed concern about the reliability of the service before the Super Bowl.

The memo said Entergy and the Superdome's engineering staff "had concerns regarding the reliability of the Dome service from Entergy's connection point to the Dome."

The memo was prepared for the Louisiana Stadium & Exposition District, the state body responsible for the Superdome.

Authorities subsequently authorized spending nearly $1 million on Superdome improvements, including more than $600,000 for upgrading the dome's electrical feeder cable system, work that was done in December.

"As discussed in previous board meetings, this enhancement is necessary to maintain both the Superdome and the New Orleans Arena as top tier facilities, and to ensure that we do not experience any electrical issues during the Super Bowl," said an LSED document dated Dec. 19.

Superdome commission records show a $513,250 contract to replace feeder cables was awarded to Allstar Electric, a company based in suburban New Orleans.

Arthur Westbrook, Allstar's project manager for the job, referred all questions about possible causes of the outage to the management company.

U.S. sues S&P over pre-crisis mortgage ratings

By Daniel Wagner
and Christina Rexrode
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The U.S. government is accusing the debt rating agency Standard & Poor's of fraud for giving high ratings to risky mortgage bonds that helped bring about the financial crisis.

The government filed a civil complaint late Monday against S&P, the first enforcement action the government has taken against a major rating agency related to the financial crisis.

S&P, a unit of New York-based McGraw-Hill Cos., has denied wrongdoing. It says the government also failed to predict the subprime mortgage crisis.

But the government's lawsuit paints a picture of a company that misled investors knowingly, more concerned about making money than about accurate ratings.

It says S&P delayed updating its ratings models, rushed through the ratings process and was fully aware that the subprime market was flailing even as it gave high marks to investments made of subprime mortgages. In 2007, one analyst forwarded a video of himself singing and dancing to a tune about the deterioration of the subprime market, with colleagues laughing.

Ratings agencies like S&P are a key part of the financial crisis narrative. When banks and other financial firms wanted to package mortgages into securities and sell them to investors, they would come to a ratings agency to get a rating for the security.

California Attorney General Kamala Harris, right, accompanied by Attorney General Eric Holder, speaks Tuesday during a news conference at the Justice Department in Washington. The U.S. government accused Standard & Poor's of inflating ratings on mortgage investments to boost its bottom line, taking aim at a key player in the run-up to the financial crisis.

Many securities made of risky subprime mortgages got high ratings, giving even the more conservative investors, like pension funds, the confidence to buy them.

Those investors suffered huge losses when housing prices plunged and many borrowers defaulted on their mortgage payments.

This arrangement has a major conflict of interest, the government's lawsuit says.

The firms that issued the securities could shop around for whichever ratings agency would give them the best rating. So the agencies could give high ratings just to get business.

The government's lawsuit says that "S&P's desire for increased revenue and market share ... led S&P to downplay and disregard the true extent of the credit risks" posed by the investments it was rating.

According to the lawsuit, S&P was constantly trying to keep the financial firms — its clients — happy.

A 2007 PowerPoint presentation on its ratings model said that being "business friendly" was a central component, according to the government.

In a 2004 document, executives said they would poll investors as part of the process for choosing a rating.

"Are you implying that we might actually reject or stifle 'superior analytics' for market considerations?" one executive wrote back. "...What is 'market perspective'? Does this mean we are to review our proposed criteria changes with investors, issuers and investment bankers? ... (W)e NEVER poll them as to content or acceptability!"

The lawsuit says this executive's concerns were ignored.

Dell founder leading $24.4 billion purchase

By Michael Liedtke
Associated Press

SAN FRANCISCO — Slumping personal computer maker Dell is bowing out of the stock market in a $24.4 billion buyout that represents the largest deal of its kind since the Great Recession dried up the financing for such risky maneuvers.

The complex agreement announced Tuesday will allow Dell Inc.'s management, including founder Michael Dell, to attempt a company turnaround away from the glare and financial pressures of Wall Street.

Dell stockholders will be paid $13.65 per share to leave the company on its own. That's 25 percent more than the $10.88 the stock was going for before word of the buyout talks trickled out last month.

But it's a steep markdown from the shares' price of $26 less than five years ago, when the company's eponymous founder Michael Dell returned for a second go-round as CEO.

Dell's decision to go private is a reflection of the tough times facing the personal computer industry as more technology spending flows toward smartphones and tablet computers. PC sales fell 3.5 percent last year, according to the research group Gartner Inc., the first annual decline in more than a decade. What's more, tablet computers are expected to outsell laptops this year.

The shift has weakened long-time stalwarts such as Dell, fellow PC maker Hewlett-Packard Co., chip maker Intel Corp. and Microsoft Corp.

Once Dell's sale is finalized, its stock will stop trading on the Nasdaq Stock Market.

Microsoft Corp. is helping the deal along by lending $2 billion to the buyers, which include investment firm Silver Lake.

Platinum and palladium climbed Tuesday as traders expected that demand for the metals will stay steady as supplies drop.
March palladium rose $7.65, or 1 percent, to settle at $765.45 per ounce. April palladium gained $9.10 to $1,707.20 per ounce.
Reports of stronger car sales have helped pushed prices for the metals up more than 1 percent this week. Both metals are used to make catalytic converters that filter car exhaust.
Prices of the metals tend to rise and fall along with car sales, said Erica Rannestad, a commodity analyst at CPM

Group in New York. That's mainly because "there are no reliable substitutes" for their use in catalytic converters, she said.
Other metals were mixed. Gold for April delivery lost $2.90 to $1,673.50 per ounce. Silver for March delivery rose 15.9 cents to $31.875 per ounce. March copper was barely changed at $3.77 per pound.
In other trading, wheat and corn dropped slightly while soybeans rose.
Wheat fell 5.5 cents to $7.575 per bushel. Corn slipped 5.25 cents to $7.29 per bushel. Soybeans edged up 6.75 cents to $14.955 per bushel.
A report showing rising activity in the manufacturing and services sectors in Europe helped support oil prices.
Benchmark oil for March delivery rose 47 cents to finish at $96.64 a barrel.
In other energy futures trading on the Nymex:
Wholesale gasoline added 3 cents to finish at $3.04 per gallon. Natural gas rose 8 cents to end at $3.40 per 1,000 cubic feet. Heating oil gained 4 cents to finish at $3.19 a gallon.

Growth in U.S. service sector slowed in January, but hiring was up

The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Growth at U.S. service companies slowed slightly in January behind weaker new orders and business activity.

But hiring improved, a bright sign for the economy.
The Institute for Supply

Management said Tuesday that its index of non-manufacturing activity dipped to 55.2 in January. That's down from 55.7 in December, which was the highest level in nearly a year. Any reading above 50 indicates expansion.

The modest decline from December's strong reading suggests the industry was not greatly hampered by an increase in Social Security taxes that reduced take-home pay for most Americans.

Companies didn't single out the rise in payroll taxes in the survey, Anthony Nieves, chair of the ISM's survey committee, said during a conference call with reporters.

The report measures growth in industries that cover 90 percent of the work force, including retail, construction, health care and financial services.

Overall, economists were encouraged by the steady reading in the services index, as well as a sharp jump in the Institute's January manufacturing index released last week. The reports suggest economic growth is rebounding the January-March quarter after shrinking in the October-December quarter.

A gauge of hiring in the services report rose to its highest level in nearly seven years. That's consistent with the solid job gains reported by retailers, construction companies and other service firms in the government's January employment report, released last week.

Advice

College freshman needs advice after ‘first break-up’

Dear Amy: I’ve read your column for years, and now I want your advice. I am a freshman in college and a couple of months ago I was dumped by my first boyfriend. We weren’t together very long, but I am still hung up over him. Winter break has ended and I’ll have to see him; I don’t know how I am supposed to feel. How do I get over him?

— Breakup Hang-Up

Dear Hang-Up: It occurs to me that I have been writing this column for more than half of your life. And I’ve lived the whole “how to get over him” question for far longer. How are you supposed to feel? Exactly the way you do feel. However, how you act can have an impact on how you feel, and to some extent, you can consciously “act” your way out of this.

Use of fat separator explained

Dear Heloise: I bought a fat separator. It looks like a measuring cup with a plastic lid that has perforated holes. How do I use it?

— Pam C. in Virginia

Dear Pam: After pouring your gravy into the separator, watch as the fat rises to the top and the gravy goes to the bottom. You will be able to see the line separating the two once the liquid settles. The lid with the holes is the strainer portion of the separator. Once the gravy has settled, remove the perforated lid and start pouring the gravy. The cup is designed to allow you to pour the gravy out, but stop short of pouring when you reach the fat layer.

— Heloise

Dear Heloise: I have a simple question for you: What is whole grain?

— A Reader, via email

Dear Reader: Well, according to the Whole Grains Council, a whole grain can be any type of grain (corn, rice, wheat, oat, barley, etc.). These grains can be made into flour or eaten “whole, cracked, split or ground” while still being considered “whole” because it has all its parts contained within the husk.

Most store-bought bottles of water pose no threat of BPA

Dear Dr. Roach: I read that plastic bottles can be dangerous for your health. Do I need to worry about drinking water from plastic bottles?

— T.M.

Dear T.M.: I think you are talking about bisphenol A, or BPA, a substance that can have some of the same effects as the female hormone estradiol. BPA has effects on many organ systems of the body, if absorbed in high-enough doses. The concern has been great enough that both the United States and Canada have banned the use of BPA in baby bottles.

BPA is found in particular types of plastics (in some plastics marked with identification code 7), especially in the plastic that lines some metal food and beverage cans. BPA is NOT found in plastics marked 1 through 6 used for food. BPA can be released with high heat and harsh chemicals from plastics, so that’s why it’s not recommended to heat food in the microwave in Model your own behavior on the coolest person you can think of and act like that person. Avoid your ex but prepare yourself for those times when you’ll run into him. Do not fall over. Stand tall. Act cool. Stuff down the drama and act neutral. Self-medicate only with the warmth of your friendships and Nora Ephron movies. Plunge into your school-work and extracurriculars. Do not drink. Erase his number from your phone. Spring will come, and by the time the lilacs are in bloom you will feel better.

Dear Amy: I’m 23 and recently graduated from college. After I moved back home, I realized that there aren’t any available jobs in my field of study. I have no job experience, no car (or license), and my student loan bills are starting to pile up. I’ve been struggling to find a job for months. However, no one seems to be willing to hire me because of my lack of work experience. I don’t want to be a burden on my family.

— Worried

Dear Worried: Volunteer

Satan loves to undermine Christians

However, Christians admittedly don’t always live up to this standard, and I’ve often asked myself why. One reason is because we’re still human, and although God has come to live within us by His Holy Spirit and has given us a new spiritual nature, our old sinful nature still lives within us also. Even the Apostle Paul admitted that his old sinful nature sometimes overwhelmed his new nature. He declared, “The evil I for an organization whose goals you share. Take any paying gigs you can get, including baby-sitting, plant-watering, cleaning houses or shoveling snow. Work on getting a driver’s license (even if you don’t have access to a car, this skill is very important). Everybody has a first job — eventually. Any work experience (paid or volunteer) will help your pitch, keep you busy, and bring in some dough while you continue to pursue your first professional opportunity.

do not want to do — this I keep on doing” (Romans 7:19). But there is another reason for this: Satan loves to see Christians squabbling among themselves, and he’ll do everything he can to make it happen. He knows it brings dishonor to the name of Christ and hurts their witness to unbelievers. The Bible reminds us that “God is not a God of disorder but of peace” (1 Corinthians 14:33). Pray for your church and its members, and especially your pastor. Ask God also to make you an instrument of His peace and love. Above all, don’t be distracted but keep your eyes on Christ and His will for your life and your church.

plastic containers. Most bottled water is made with plastic with ID code 1, 2 or 4, and these have no BPA.

Dear Dr. Roach: My husband suffers from jock itch, but has no rash. Our primary-care physician says, “Just use powder,” but he has been using Gold Bond powder for more than a year, and it is not working! What do you suggest?

— F.L.

Dear F.L.: Jock itch is a common condition. It’s usually caused by a fungal infection, and is the same infection that can be found almost anywhere you have skin folds and it is warm and humid. Powder dries the skin and makes it harder for the fungus to grow, so it usually works. But if it doesn’t, I would try an antifungal cream like clotrimazole twice daily for two to four weeks. If that doesn’t clear it up, it may not be caused by a fungal infection. Then it would be time to go back to your PCP or to a dermatologist.

the illness and its treatment. To obtain a copy, write: Dr. Roach — No. 304, Box 536475, Orlando, FL 32853-6475. Enclose a check or money order (no cash) for $4.75 with the recipient’s printed name and address. Please allow four weeks for delivery.

Horoscope

TODAY’S BIRTHDAY (Feb. 6). It’s your year to change your karma in one area of your life that’s been challenging for you. You’ll make money by acting on your hunches this month. March introduces auspicious new friends and mentors. April brings willpower, and it will be relatively easy for you to trade a bad habit for a good one. Travel in August. Capricorn and Pisces people adore you. Your lucky numbers are: 14, 7, 4, 24 and 38.

ARIES (March 21-April 19). How can you defuse these strong feelings you are still carrying? The same way you defuse other strong essences: Open the container and leave them exposed to the open air for a while.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20). You know people who need to know each other. It will be convenient for you to make the connection now, thus altering the destiny of all parties involved, including you.

GEMINI (May 21-June 21). You’re more sensitive today — and not just regarding your own feelings, but also the feelings of others. You may be the only one who recognizes another person’s pain, which makes you responsible for helping.

CANCER (June 22-July 22). You love the creature comforts of home, and you’re as territorial as any other animal on the planet. So you understand when others need to spend time in their own space, and you don’t take silence personally.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22). Open up to your higher mind. You have nothing to fear. Your intuition springs from a loving place in your being and will guide you with the good judgment of an amazing parent or a wise teacher. It will not frighten you.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22). You are being gently prodded toward a sunnier mood. The attitude adjustment is up to you. Should you choose to make it, you will see and seize an opportunity that was previously obscured by clouds.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23). Your soul and your ego are of different opinions as to what your next move should be. Can you blame them for being so far apart on the matter? Each has a completely different agenda.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 21). If those you influence are as graceful and humble as you these days, you’ll not only get along swimmingly, but you’ll also form an alliance that does some real good in the world.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21). Unlike boring people, when you get the nonverbal cues that another party is not interested in your talk, you change your subject or approach. It’s what makes you a fun and exciting communicator.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19). It is futile to search for mythical lands or quest for articles of magic and power when all that’s necessary to create a new world is already around you.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18). Were you taught to shake your shoes out before you put them on, lest an insect has decided to make it his temporary home? Following this and other random but pertinent safety tips will make today more pleasant.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20). Good karma swings back now. You could finally get the cooperation and partnership you’ve needed to launch a project you’re sure will be an uplifting experience for all involved.

Hillary Clinton's political career on hold?

Health issues, Benghazi may have put 2016 presidential run in different light

By Bradley Klapper and Matthew Lee

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Hillary Rodham Clinton's plan for 2013 was simple.

She'd embark on an epic swansong around the world as secretary of state, a dizzying itinerary of east-west and north-south flights that would take her past 1 million miles in the air at the helm of American diplomacy and perhaps break her own record of 112 countries visited while in the post. Then, there would be a long rest, time and work with her husband, former President Bill Clinton, on development issues and a sequel to her 2003 memoir "Living History."

Finally, she'd make a destiny-defining decision: whether to try again to become America's first female president.

Her health got in the way: a nasty stomach virus while returning from a weeklong trip to Europe, exhaustion, severe dehydration, a faint, a fall and a concussion that led to a brief hospitalization when doctors discovered a blood clot near her brain. The woman who'd seemed to lay the perfect groundwork for another presidential bid — indeed, who'd made a life carving out her own path — was sidelined by circumstances beyond her control.

It was a rare sign of vulnerability in what had been a carefully charted four years of often grueling overseas travel and behind-the-scenes politics, where as a peace mediator, international enforcer and global ambassador of America she fully emerged from the giant shadow of her husband. But it was not the only sign.

BURDEN OF BENGHAZI

The deadly terrorist attack on the U.S. Consulate in Benghazi, Libya, on Sept. 11, 2012, revealed an episode of State Department miscommunication on her watch that could feed into her diplomatic legacy and give future political opponents, should she return to politics, an opening to exploit.

And so, when she testified to Congress about the attack, both the drive and the drama forever associated with the Clintons were suddenly back. In the final spectacle of a diplomatic career that ended Friday when John Kerry succeeded her, she would not be browbeaten.

Pressed perhaps once too often on why the terrorist assault was miscast as a public protest in the days afterward, Clinton went after her Republican inquisitor with her voice rising and quivering in anger. "What difference, at this point, does it make?" she demanded. "It is our job to figure out what happened and do everything we can to prevent it from ever happening again, Senator."

Last Thursday, Clinton denounced those who still insist the administration lied about the attack.

"There are some people in politics and in the press who can't be confused by the facts," she told The Associated Press in her last one-on-one interview as secretary of state. "They just will not live in an evidence-based world. And that's regrettable. It's regrettable for our political system and for the people who serve our government in very dangerous, difficult circumstances."

Whatever the merits of the arguments, Clinton's responses confirmed she had lost none of the vigor that had taken her from defeated Democratic Party presidential candidate to one of the world's most popular and recognizable women.

And, it suggested that despite her recent health troubles, the former senator and first lady was intent on keeping her political future in her own hands, even as she laughed off attempts to coronate her as a candidate-in-waiting.

"I am still secretary of state, so I'm out of politics," Clinton told CBS' "60 Minutes" in a joint interview with President Barack Obama last week-end. She cracked: "I'm forbidden from even hearing these questions."

But as Clinton was leaving office, the very appearance of two former foes so close and so amicable only seemed to underscore Clinton's eventual success — if she wants it.

WEIGHING 2016

Even before her ailments, people close to her were debating the pros and cons of another presidential run. Would it be worth the cost in time, energy and especially money — her 2008 campaign debt was just retired in January — and would it spark a new round of personal attacks on her, her husband and her character?

Polls show her as the popular favorite for 2016; no Democrat is better placed right now to unify the party. With instant national appeal and the highest approval ratings of her political career, she would also presumably have a head start on any Republican candidate in a general election. And at age 69, she'd hardly be too old to lead. She'd be five years younger than Vice President Joe Biden, a possible party rival.

Yet any sense of inevitability is decidedly premature. After all, Clinton was considered the prohibitive favorite for the 2008 Democratic nomination for several years, right up until Obama beat her in Iowa. Like Obama, some of the potential contenders for 2016 are largely unknown quantities whose strengths cannot yet be measured.

There's no question Clinton's years as a well-regarded senator and especially her statesmanship in the Obama administration have lifted her above the partisan fray and improved her standing with the public. Her favorability rating in polls is at its highest point in her career, 67 percent in a recent Washington Post-ABC survey, indicating that the polarization that marked her years in the White House, seen again in the 2008 campaign, has been overcome.

Some of that hard-earned respect would vanish the moment she re-emerges as the face of the Democratic Party and becomes a critical player in rancorous debates over immigration, abortion, debt, taxes, health care and more.

Inevitably, she would in some ways revert to the divisive personality, who — fairly or unfairly — in the 1990s inspired a massive campaign to defeat her "Hillarycare" health overhaul and became the first president's wife to appear before a grand jury when called on by the White-water investigation. That probe, the White House travel office firings, her feminist positions and the many donors to her husband's campaigns invited to stay at the White House made some voters cynical about the Clintons' integrity and moved critics to go after her in strikingly personal terms.

Columnist William Safire, for one, famously labeled her "a congenital liar."

Clinton, of course, wasn't one to shy away from confrontation herself.

In the 2008 campaign, she called Obama a "slum landlord" representative and called out the Illinois senator with the riposte "Shame on you, Barack Obama." A decade earlier,

ASSOCIATED PRESS

Secretary of State Hillary Rodham testifies on Capitol Hill in Washington last month before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee hearing on the deadly September attack on the U.S. diplomatic mission in Benghazi, Libya, that killed Ambassador Chris Stevens and three other Americans.

she dismissed talk of her husband's infidelity as part of a "vast right-wing conspiracy" that had dogged him for years.

A MANGLED TALE

Now, reaction to the attack on the U.S. Consulate in Libya, in particular, is being looked at by her allies as a cautionary tale of the tone that awaits any future presidential bid. Although no investigation has specifically faulted Clinton or backed up claims of a conspiracy by the Obama administration to provide disinformation about the assault, Benghazi's timing in the final weeks of a close presidential contest led to bitter and personal criticism of Clinton in the blogosphere, on cable television and on Capitol Hill.

It went so far that some critics suggested she was faking a "diplomatic illness," as John Bolton, a former U.N. ambassador for President George W. Bush, put it, to avoid testifying on Benghazi.

"There is an obligation here, especially if Secretary Clinton decides to run for president, to indicate what happened," Bolton said.

With the country pressing for answers after Ambassador Chris Stevens and three other Americans were killed in the Benghazi attack, Clinton left the difficult task of presenting the Obama administration's response to Susan Rice, America's U.N. envoy and her would-be successor as secretary of state.

Relying on talking points drafted by U.S. intelligence, Rice delivered the now-retracted version of the consulate siege as a protest hijacked by extremists, with no evidence to suggest the attack was premeditated. Three months later, Rice was forced to withdraw from consideration to succeed Clinton because of fierce criticism from Republicans in the Senate.

WHAT'S NEXT?

Clinton seems not to have made up her mind on a presidential run, although she insists, seemingly less strenuously than before, that she is through with the high-wire of politics. Certainly many of her supporters, who just days ago launched a super PAC to support another presidential run, want her to go for it.

At a September meeting in New York, Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu asked her: "What are you going to do?" It was an apparent reference to her post-secretary plans. Clinton shook her head and said, "I don't know."

Asked on the eve of her departure from the State Department if she still had contributions to make, she replied "Absolutely," but stressed that the how and when were not yet clear.

"I haven't decided yet," she told the AP. "I really haven't yet. I have deliberately cabined it off. I am going to be secretary of state until the very last minute when I walk out the door. And then I am going to take the weekend off and then I may start thinking about all the various offers and requests and ideas that have come my way."

In the final months of her tenure as secretary of state, Clinton helped secure a cease-fire between Israel and the Palestinian militant group Hamas in the Gaza Strip and ordered a series of changes in the operations of her department in response to the Benghazi attack.

She also has remained committed to core interests such as women and children in developing economies and civil society in repressive countries — issues she has tried to elevate to an equal diplomatic footing with peace processes and trade talks.

Today in history

The Associated Press

Today is Wednesday, Feb. 6, the 37th day of 2013. There are 328 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

On Feb. 6, 1788, Massachusetts became the sixth state to ratify the U.S. Constitution.

On this date:

In 1911, Ronald Wilson Reagan, the 40th president of the United States, was born in Tampico, Ill.

In 1943, a Los Angeles jury acquitted actor Errol Flynn of three counts of statutory rape.

In 1959, the United States successfully test-fired for the first time a Titan intercontinental ballistic missile from Cape Canaveral.

In 1973, Dixy Lee Ray was appointed by President Richard Nixon to be the first woman to head the Atomic Energy Commission.

In 1992, 16 people were killed when a C-130 military transport plane crashed in Evansville, Ind.

In 1993, tennis Hall-of-Famer and human rights advocate Arthur Ashe died in New York at age 49.

In 1998, President Bill Clinton signed a bill changing the name of Washington National Airport to Ronald Reagan Washington National Airport. Pop music star Falco, who'd had a 1986 hit with "Rock Me Amadeus," died in a traffic accident in the Dominican Republic; he was 40.

Ten years ago: ABC's "20/20" aired a British documentary, "Living With Michael Jackson," in which the King of Pop revealed he sometimes let children sleep in his bed.

Five years ago: At least 57 deaths were reported after two days of tornadoes that plowed across Arkansas, Tennessee, Kentucky and Alabama.

One year ago: The U.S. closed its embassy in Syria and Britain recalled its ambassador to Damascus in a new Western push to get President Bashar Assad to leave power and halt the murderous grind in Syria. Jeremy Lin scored a career-high 28 points in his first career start as the New York Knicks beat the Utah Jazz 99-88.
